The mobile units are trucks carrying picture projectors and a rolling screen attached to the top to enable the showing of the films outdoors. The pictures chosen for exhibition are "Drums of Doom," a pre-Hitler German film drama, with English dialogue, produced by G. W. Pabst, director of "Kameradschaft" and "Don Quixote," and "Dealers in Death," a pictorial document of the munitions racket which has been endorsed by the United States Senate Munitions Investigation Committee. There will be several short subjects, including "Why," an animated cartoon, produced by Good Will Pictures, and "Toward Unity," with Gilbert Seldes as commentator.

The pictures will be shown in parks, churches, clubs, at summer conferences and on college campuses. Each program will run one hour. In most cases, no admission will be charged.

Charnas Joins Moss In Theatre Project

Harry L. Charnas, for the last nine years managing director of Warner Brothers Metropolitan Theatres, is resigning from that post to associate himself with B. S. Moss in the operation of the new theatre now being constructed on the site of the old Criterion Theatre on Broadway.

The new theater is being constructed with a special view to perfection of acoustical and visual facilities. It will be equipped for stage presentations on a large scale. The possibilities of television also have been anticipated in the layout of the house. It will seat 1600 and will be operated on a first-run policy. The price scale will run to 99 cents top, with special loges at $1.25.

Margaret Linley to Lyons

Margaret Linley, casting director for the past five years for the Theatre Guild in New York, has resigned from that organization to take a similar post with the A. and S. Lyons Agency.

Silent Stars in Picture

Bryant Washburn, Jack Mulhall, Frank Mayo and Harry Myers will play themselves in Paramount's "Hollywood Boulevard."

OPPORTUNITY IS POUNDING

(on your box-office window!)

In "SINS OF MAN" 20th Century-Fox gives you another of the year's great pictures.

"SINS OF MAN" stars Jean Hersholt . . . in his first picture since "The Country Doctor". . . in a sensational performance.

"SINS OF MAN" introduces to the screen Don Ameche, radio star of "The First Nighter." His brilliant performance in this picture already has earned him stellar assignments in the 1936-37 program.

"SINS OF MAN" packs the kind of emotional wallop that made "Humoresque," "Stella Dallas" and "Sorrell and Son" the box-office smashes of their time.

The values are there! But to get all that's coming to you, you've got to get behind it.

"SINS OF MAN" is as big as you make it. It is one of the greatest word-of-mouth hits ever made.

"SINS OF MAN," forcefully advertised, will start packing your house from the opening of the doors.

"SINS OF MAN" is a production of which 20th Century-Fox is highly proud . . . and of which you also will be proud!

If you've asked for a screening, you've seen for yourself!

INDUSTRY LOSES ONE OF ITS NOTED ATTORNEYS IN NATHAN BURKAN

Represented Many Prominent Figures, Also Columbia, Paramount, United Artists, MGM, Academy; Power in Tammany

An Outstanding Authority on Copyright Law, Was Guiding Spirit in ASCAP, Which He Helped Found in 1914

In the passing of Nathan Burkan last Saturday, the motion picture industry lost one of its outstanding counsellors and the nation one of its foremost authorities on copyright law.

In his 57th year, Mr. Burkan was taken suddenly ill Saturday morning with acute indigestion and died at 8 a.m. at his home at Great Neck, L. I.

He played a leading part in the legal aspects of the development of the motion picture industry, and represented many notable figures in the amusement, political, literary and social worlds.

At the time of his death he was general counsel to Columbia Pictures Corporation and a director of, and counsel for, United Artists. He represented Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount in special assignments, and was general counsel for the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers. He had been for many years attorney for the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. A Democrat, he was high in the councils of Tammany Hall.

Mr. Burkan was born at Jassy, Rumania, November 8, 1879, and came to America in his boyhood. He was educated in the public schools and the College of the City of New York and New York University, where he obtained his law degree in 1899. He was admitted to the bar the following year.

Champion of Creative Artists

Prominent civic and political leaders and members of the bench and bar mingled with film executives in the throng of approximately 2,000 who attended the funeral services at Temple Emanu-El in New York City Tuesday morning. Gene Buck, president of ASCAP and a friend of Mr. Burkan 25 years, eulogized him as a champion of the rights of creative artists and of the oppressed. In the list of honorary pallbearers, which were led by Mayor F. H. LaGuardia and former Mayor James J. Walker, the motion picture industry was represented by Will H. Hays, Nicholas M. Schenck, Joseph M. Schenck, Sidney R. Kent, John E. Otterson, Jack Cohn, J. Robert Rubin, David Bernstein, George J. Schaefer, Spyros Skouras, Thomas Meighan and others. Burial was at Union Field cemetery, Queens, L. I.

Mr. Burkan is survived by his widow, the former Marienne Alexander, whom he married in 1927; one son, Nathan, Jr., five years old, and two brothers, Joseph and David.

NATHAN BURKAN

Though long a power in Tammany, he prided himself that he never held a salaried public office and never represented a contractor or any one else having a claim against the city or the state. The only two public offices he accepted (neither carried compensation) were a membership in the New York state constitutional convention of 1915 and chairmanship of the Triborough Bridge Authority, which he held at the time of his death. Repeatedly suggested for leadership of Tammany, he refused to vie for the office. He was leader of the Wichita Democratic Club.

Mr. Burkan was a member of the Lambs, the Friars, Motion Picture Club, Manhattan Club, Grand Street Boys Association, Pacific Lodge of Freemasons, Jewish Theatrical Guild, Federation of Jewish Charities, the American, New York State and Federal Bar Associations and the New York County Lawyers' Association and Law Institute.

"If he liked a person and had a lot of confidence in him, there was nothing he would not do for him," said Sol A. Rosenblatt, one of Mr. Burkan's legal proteges and former NRA motion picture code administrator, now in private practice in New York. Mr. Rosenblatt recalled that in 1929, only five years out of Harvard law school, he was sent by Mr. Burkan to Washington to argue a case in the United States supreme court, which is a privilege the heads of legal firms like to retain for themselves.

ASCAP His "Lengthened Shadow"

One of the sayings about Mr. Burkan is that the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers was his "lengthened shadow." It was in 1902 that he started specializing in the law of literary property and copyrights. In the same year he acquired his first important client, the late Victor Herbert, the composer of light operas.

His practice demonstrated to him the need for an organization to safeguard musical works, and in 1914 he was instrumental in founding the Society. Until his death he was the guiding spirit in ASCAP, which was closer to his heart than any of his other notable achievements.

Drew Up Huge Chaplin Contract

In 1916 Charlie Chaplin engaged Mr. Burkan to draw up his $670,000 employment contract with John R. Freuler of Mutual Film Corporation. Chaplin paid him $1,000 for a day's work. When the contract was formally signed, Burkan convinced Mr. Freuler that he should have a memento of the occasion, and sold him his $6 fountain pen, with which the contract was signed, for $35. Mr. Burkan remained Chaplin's friend and advisor until his death.

He figured in the trial of Mae West and 44 others for taking part in the allegedly indecent play, "The Pleasure Man." It was a long trial, and in the end the jury deliberated 10 hours, but failed to reach an agreement. Mr. Burkan also represented Miss West when her play, "The Captive," was raided in New York a few years ago.

Defends Man He Prosecuted

His legal associates say that Mr. Burkan always sought to be completely just. A number of years ago he represented Henry King, the director, in an action against Inspiration Pictures, which principally was controlled by Charles Duell, who produced "The White Sister." Mr. Burkan won the suit. Mr. Duell, in the meantime, had been indicted for perjury in connection with a case involving Lillian Gish, star of "The White Sister." Duell, in common parlance, "had taken a licking" and was without resources. He asked Burkan for help, and Burkan agreed to represent him.

After a trial of two weeks in the federal district court in New York, the jury brought in an eleven to one verdict for acquittal. The indictment subsequently was nol prossed by the Government. Mr. Burkan never received a cent for his services, his one desire, say his associates, being to defend a man who he believed was unjustly accused.

He brought suit against the Standard Oil Company of Indiana to prevent that corporation from keeping control of the Pan-American Transport Corporation, and he also was counsel for the temporary receivers of the estate of Arnold Rothstein, gambler, who was slain in November, 1928. His bill in the Rothstein matter was $75,000.

RECEIPTS, ATTENDANCES AND PRICES

The chart, based on the Motion Picture Herald's tabulation of box office grosses, indicates the trends in theatre receipts, attendance and admission prices from 1931 to date. The figures for 1936 are estimates based on business during the first twenty weeks of this year. The cities used in the tabulation are Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, Hollywood, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, New York, Oklahoma City, Omaha, Portland, and San Francisco. The receipts, attendance, and average admission prices in these cities during the year 1931 were taken as bases in the figuring of the other percentages.

Exhibitor Units Set Conventions

The Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association will hold its annual convention and election of officers at the rooms of the Variety Club in Kansas City, June 23-24. Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, with which the unit is affiliated, is expected to discuss the progress of recent trade practice conferences in New York with distributors.

Legislation is expected to be an important topic of discussion at the meeting, in view of the probable special session of the legislature in July. It is anticipated that the grievance board plan will be continued. The board includes Frank Cassil, A. J. Simmons and Tom Edwards.

June 15 at Spokane has been selected as the date and place of the next regional meeting of the MPTO of Washington.

Meanwhile, the MPTO of St. Louis, Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois Monday held a special mass meeting of members, exchange men and salesmen to discuss the necessity of regulating the building of new theatres in the area, which is currently in the middle of a building boom. Fred Wehrenberg, president of the unit, presided.

Seek a Compromise on Changes in Fire Laws

A committee representing major companies will meet during the week of June 15 with a committee from the office of the New York fire commissioner in an effort to arrive at a compromise on amendments to the fire regulations as they affect the storage of film in exchanges. At a meeting at the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. offices, at which were present representatives of the major companies and Arthur Dickinson of that organization, discussions were held last week leading to the preparation of counter proposals on the planned amendments.

Beekman Film Sues Warner

A suit for $200,000 damages alleging copyright infringement has been filed in the federal court in New York by Beekman Film Corporation against Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc. The complaint asks for an injunction and accounting. The plaintiff charges that on June 17, 1933, it produced a film called "This Is America," and subsequently the defendant, after a copy of the picture had been submitted to Jack L. Warner, produced a picture called "The Yanks Are Coming," which, the complaint charges, appropriated the results of the plaintiff's labor and infringed upon the exclusive rights of the plaintiff.

Poppy

(Paramount)

Romantic Comedy

Two kinds of entertainment are presented here; typical W. C. Fields gag, situation and dialogue comedy that's topical as it relates to the story and youthful romance that is given a serio dramatic twist that has a comedy trend. Not a pretentious attraction, but an amusing and interesting one, it provides plenty of the Fields' brand of entertainment, both as he is a participant in the story's action and in specialty features. By way of contrast it offers a few adventurous episodes in young boy and girl love and some vivid bits of light dramatic, but always comedy hued conniving drama.

The plot of the show is simple, but it takes some wide divergences in order to bring Fields into the action at necessary moments. As a happy go lucky grifter, Professor McGonigle accompanied by his daughter arrives in a country town. Quickly the Professor establishes himself as the prize medicine selling star of a traveling carnival. Meanwhile daughter Poppy meets and falls in love with Mayor Farnsworth's son, Billy. The charm of this is balanced by the menacing to Fields inclinations of gabby Countess De Puissi, masquerading as heir to the Putnam estates and fortunes. In connivance with hick lawyer, Whiffen, McGonigle sets Poppy up as a claimant for the estate, convincing the Mayor-executor that she is the legitimate heir. But Poppy encounters romantic troubles with Billy and some that threaten to be more serious crop up for the Professor as Whiffen teaming up with the Countess introduces the double cross. As things look dangerous to both, kindly Sarah Tucker, who has befriended Poppy, recognizes the resemblance between the child and the deceased Mrs. Putnam. Forced to make a clean breast of his history, Professor McGonigle tells how he had adopted Poppy years ago and that he knew all along that she was the rightful claimant, an action that is dismaying to Whiffen and the Countess now revealed as an erstwhile showgirl. Finale is a happy ending for the Professor, Poppy and Billy.

Revolt of the Zombies

(Academy)

Melodrama

The zombie idea, long popular in fiction circles, is treated of melodramatically in a setting conducive to story purposes, a remote and oriental region into which a party of whites are sent in search of the secret of zombie creation and control.

Exploitation possibilities reside chiefly in capitalization of the supernatural or superstitious phenomena associated with the creation of these indestructible men of occult origin. Stunts suggest themselves readily.

The story begins with brief battle scenes showing a zombie detachment taking an enemy trench, walking uninjured through shell fire that perforates their bodies. At the conclusion of the war emissaries of several nations are sent to seek and destroy the secret formula by which zombies, conceivably a menace to world welfare, are created.

In the party are two young scientists and a young woman with whom both are in love. She choses one. The other discovers the zombie formula, creates an army, takes command of the expedition, marries the girl, then accedes to her plea that he give up his power, whereupon the liberated zombies kill him.

Reviewed at the Rialto theatre, Times Square, where a lobby ballyhoo attracted crowds that impeded pedestrian traffic and filled the theatre to capacity. Audience reaction noncommittal.

And Sudden Death

(Paramount)

Melodrama

Basically this is a cooperation exploitation feature. In a starkly melodramatic manner, through which runs a necessary thread of romantic love interest, it seeks to and succeeds in being a preachment against reckless and dangerous automobile driving. Practically the picture is propaganda that lends itself readily to tie-ups with police departments, auto clubs, newspapers and insurance companies, units that can be expected to give it publicity support.

Production effects graphically illustrating the results of careless and criminal driving, story motivation is devoted to illustrate in a forceful vivid manner the idea read into the already widely publicized title. Narration follows a personal trend that has for its intent the making of the picture's auditors feel that the lesson of the film is directed at them.

In the story, Betty Winslow has little regard for traffic ordinances or the rights of others. Continually arrested without effect, Lieutenant Knox has her sentenced to a tour of the gruesome accidents that happen daily on the streets and highways. Here production effects portray incidents that are object lessons which make a sane and careful driver of Betty. Her brother, Jackie, who mixes alcohol and gasoline and is inconsiderate of his own safety as he is of that of others, crashes into a school bus. A craven coward, he permits his sister, who is willing in order to preserve the family prestige, to assume responsibility for the accident. She is tried on a manslaughter charge, during which the perils of reckless driving are again portrayed, but upon her sentence, Jackie makes a death bed confession which exonerates the girl.

Straight entertainment value of the picture is secondary to its worth as an educational lecture, the story being merely a medium through which attention is focused from a personal viewpoint facts that are familiar to all.

Hearts Divided

(Warner)

Drama with Music

Analysis of this picture reveals plenty of easily adaptable angles that should make for interest creating exploitation. Possessed of an intriguing title, it provides in Marion Davies a widely publicized name and in Dick Powell one which both exhibitors and patrons value highly. It backs these players up with half a dozen or more marquee names including the comedians, Charlie Ruggles, Edward Everett Horton and Arthur Treacher; the dramatic Claude Rains and Henry Stephenson, Walter Kingsford, Etienne Girardot, Halliwell Hobbes, Hobart Cavanagh, Hattie McDaniels and Beulah Bondi established character players. Against a semi-historic background, which concerns itself with the negotiations leading to the Louisiana Purchase, it tells a drama contrasted music tinged story of romantic love interest. Further the production is well mounted, completely capturing the spirit of its occasion and people in the early years of the past century.

In the story, which has a considerable musical embellishment, Captain Jerome Bonaparte, brother of Napoleon, comes to America incognito to arrange details leading to the Louisiana Purchase. He meets and becomes attracted to Betsy Patterson. Engaged as her tutor, the romantic quality of this situation is given a comedy contrast by the work of Henry, John and Sir Harry, ambitious suitors for Betsy's hand. Napoleon, who kept a close watch on Jerome's activities becomes aware of his brother's attachment for the Colonial girl and summons him home. The parting between the young lovers is dramatic and this drama becomes more intense when it is understood that Jerome must effect a state marriage that will benefit the Emperor's political ambitions. Betsy, who in the meantime has learned Jerome's true identity, follows him to France. In a suspense laden series of situations, she pleads with the Emperor to let true love have its sway. Napoleon is adamant in his intention that Jerome shall obey his commands, but political events which follow the return of heartbroken Betsy to America permit Jerome to follow her shortly to effect the happy romantic ending.

Well acted, directed and produced, the picture has an entertaining quality that should appeal to average audiences.

The Marriage of Corbal

(Capitol - GFD, London)

Costume Melodrama

The French Revolution, popular background for romantic melodrama from way back in the pre-picture era, is used in this adaptation of a Rafael Sabatini novel with considerable effectiveness in a pictorial sense. Dramatically, it is not a production for the critical public; there is too much pose in the acting and too much starch in the dialogue, and one's sense of period gets quite a few shocks in the accents of leading players and in the vernacular in which various chorus numbers are rendered, giving the picture, at intervals, the atmosphere of a musical.

Against all this is the fact that it is a real honest to goodness "meller" for the public which likes to see a nice clean girl "aristocrat" dressing as a boy and besting nasty dirty Reds; also it does provide some realistic pictures of Revolutionary tribunals and of the Terror.

Cleonie, a beautiful aristocrat, is rescued from the Terror by Varennes, a Citizen Deputy. He puts her into boy's clothes, representing her to be his nephew. She accompanies him on a trip, at the head of a force of soldiers, to deal with counter-revolutionaries supposed to be led by the Marquis of Corbal.

Realizing that Varennes wishes to become her lover, Cleonie takes their joint passport and attempts to escape. Pursued by soldiers, she takes refuge in the chateau of Corbal. Varennes sets up a Tribunal and Corbal is brought before it. His popularity with the mob is so great that Varennes is afraid to go to extremities. Later Varennes, who has discovered that Cleonie is hiding in the chateau, announces a Paris decree that all aristocrats must marry peasants. To escape him, Cleonie marries Corbal secretly in the chateau chapel. They are condemned to death but Varennes, knowing he is out of favor in Paris and likely to be executed, changes coats with Corbal and shoots himself. Corbal and Cleonie successfully cross the frontier.

The exploitation campaign is suggested by the story. There is a book tieup and the author's name has publicity value.

Trade shown, Leicester Square Theatre, prior to premier run there. Reception suggested the need of cutting to remove rather obvious crudities of incident and acting.

Terry-Toon Cartoon

As one old salt to another, the seamen with a mermaid tatooed on his chest regales his listener with the tall tale of how he saw her in midocean, pursued her to the depths, killed the objecting octupus and married the gal. Interesting Travelogue

This short travelogue is interesting in its composition and subject matter, particularly in the case of the latter because it presents a region, the Gaspe Peninsula of Canada, of which little is known but which is growing more and more in the public's attention.

The camera starts at Montreal, journeys from there to Quebec and after covering these two town starts on a tour of the peninsula. On the way the scenery, sports, historical spots, and industries are all covered.

Where travel films are appreciated, this should more than please. Running time, 11 minutes.

Glimpses of the Hollywood Scene

In a varied and balanced content, this newest edition of those intimate shots of the Hollywood scene furnished further interesting glimpses into the life of film folks at work and play. For the male spectator, particularly the sport enthusiast, Otto Kruger and Edward Arnold perform with real skill on a handsome Beverly Hills green the old but interesting game of bowling. With eye and ear to the response and approval of the feminine fan, Alma Lloyd, Kay Linaker and Marie Wilson parade for envious contemplation some of Hollywood's fashion creations. Comedy is furnished by the boyish and exuberant antics of Al Jolson upon the momentous occasion of having his "mammy" knees imprinted for posterity in the Grauman's Chinese theatre collection of celebrated footsteps. A fitting climax is devoted to scenes at the recent dinner at which the veteran motion picture pioneer, D. W. Griffith, is shown presenting the gold statuettes for the year's best performances to Bette Davis and Victor McLaglen while such cinema favorites as Binnie Barnes, May Robson, Jeanette MacDonald, Clark Gable, Gene Raymond and Joel McCrea look on approvingly and applaud the winners.—Running time, ten minutes.

Domestic Comedy

Tim and Irene, who may or may not predate Burns and Allen, get married this time, with Irene's family going along on the honeymoon and so forth. The wedding ceremony, performed by the snoring genius of "Broadway Melody," is the comic high spot and comes early in the picture. To offset the letdown, evidently, a number of straight pictorial shots of Niagara Falls are inserted, and then there are sleepwalking and other incidents building up to an abduction finale with the family still, a little unexpectedly, on hand. The subject is about par for the series.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Stooge Slapstick

Rough and rowdy as usual, this present vehicle for the Three Stooges finds them continuing their face slapping, head slamming, lunatic way. In a style of comedy never subtle, the latest antics of the daffy trio will delight those who relish their comics in a broad and slapstick genre. The opening scene finds the Stooges away back in 1918, comfortably asleep under the cover of a heavy shell barrage. The time advances to the present and the Stooges, in need of food, are duped into joining the army under the impression that they are being signed on as elevator operators. Assigned to target practice, the Stooges proceed to blast away a house, split asunder a bridge and sink a flagship. Stanley Blystone and Vernon Dent supply minor assistance to the Stooges in their current excursion into lunacy.—Running time, 19 minutes.

Race Track Comedy

Tom Howard and George Shelton beat the races in the only positively surefire way ever devised and save the old plantation for the colonel and his granddaughter in an effective and not overdone burlesque of "In Old Kentucky" and its prototypes. The race track scenes, consuming most of the footage, contain a number of practically guaranteed laughs. Howard gives Shelton more than the usual number of gag lines. Both are in form.—Running time, 18½ minutes.

Dog Lore

Greyhounds, poodles and a great many other breeds, including the mutt, are attractively photographed and more attractively described by Narrator Basil Ruysdael (who makes a pun a pleasure) in this Treasure Chest production. Trainers' grooming of show dogs and veterinarians' treatment of the ill and injured supply sequences sure of audience approval. A dog cemetery is interestingly presented and a collection of dog heroes is described in an effective ending.—Running time, 8½ minutes.

LUSITANIA SALVAGING IN COLOR AND SOUND

Captain Craig Hopes to Film Operations 312 Feet Down, Microphones in Divers' Suits

Captain John D. Craig, surrounded by the briny, as he will appear while filming the salvaging of the Lusitania. This shot of the captain was taken when he made sequences in Hollywood for "Sea Killers."

A battle with Ole Debbil Sea to salvage the treasure believed to lie in the hull of the SS Lusitania, sent to its grave by a German torpedo off the coast of Ireland on fateful May 7, 1915, will be filmed at a depth of 312 feet in three-color process and with actual sound, in the plan of Captain John D. Craig and his adventurous crew of diving cameramen.

Captain Craig has been commissioned by the Argonaut Corporation, Ltd., of Glasgow, Scotland, to produce a picture while the seamen of the salvage ship Ophir, sailing under the Argonaut colors, labor to excavate the gold and jewels that went down with the vessel.

Captain Craig, who has produced underseas sequences for a number of Hollywood films, has an arrangement with H. J. Demetriades of the Argonaut organization, which is underwriting the production of a feature. The captain said that Mr. Demetriades, like his compatriot, Sir Basil Zaharoff, is something of a man of mystery, that he had a hand in the recent restoration of former Prince George of Greece to the monarchy.

While amassing a fortune from the salvage of ships torpedoed during the World War, Mr. Demetriades has an antipathy for war, Captain Craig declared, and one of his instructions is that the film shall convey a message of peace.

Location Reported Established

After long search, Captain Henry Russell of the Orphir scientifically established last fall that the Lusitania rests in the Atlantic Ocean 11½ miles off the Old Head of Kinsales, on the southern shore of Ireland near Cork. Salvaging and motion picture operations are due to start late in June or early in July and are expected to be completed by the end of September.

Captain Craig will take a crew of eight, including divers, cameramen and sound men, and will attempt to film the efforts of the Orphir divers to reach the safe and strong boxes of the ship. Legend has it that there was $15,000,000 in gold bullion. The Lusitania is known to have carried $1,500,000 in bullion and probably $1,000,000 in jewels, in addition to an unestimated but believed large amount of specie, according to the captain.

The Argonaut corporation estimates the salvage to be worth between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000, of which the British government will receive a share by virtue of having held the insurance contract for the vessel.

Says Equipment Is Set

Captain Craig's contract with the Argonaut associates hinged on his ability to assemble the necessary lighting and other equipment and the production crew, this proviso probably having been stipulated because of the corporation's experience last year with Scottish Films Productions, which failed in attempts to make pictures of the Lusitania wreck. The captain said that he had fulfilled the requirements and that final contracts shortly will be signed.

Because of the depth of 312 feet, it was found necessary to built special camera equipment, which will be provided by Bell and Howell and Debrie, and three other cameras are being constructed of Captain Craig's own design.

It will be the first time that lights have been shot to that distance under the sea, according to Captain Craig. A flood of 60,000 watts from a battery of 5,000-watt lamps perfected at the Nela Park laboratories of the General Electric Company will play on the scene of operations for the camera work, at a cost of $235 an hour. The lamps will last 25 hours under water, and will be equipped with an aluminum reflector treated with an electro-chemical process rendering it impervious to the chemical action of salt water. The cameras also will be encased in corrosion-proof metals.

Microphone in Divers' Suits

Sound recording presents a problem, as it will be impracticable to install a microphone at the ocean bed, but Captain Craig said he hoped to obtain some sound effects by placing a "mike" in the divers' suits, into which they could narrate their descriptions and probably pick up such sounds as the first ringing of the ship's bell.

A three-color process developed by two German scientists who were financed by Mr. Demetriades will be used, having been tested as practicable at a depth of 300 feet, said Captain Craig. He explained that this process retains the red whereas with other processes the red band is barely visible at a depth of 20 feet on account of refraction of light rays.

To permit work on the ocean floor, the divers will wear a suit recently perfected by Tritonia Corporation, a subsidiary of the Argonaut organization, said Captain Craig. This has been styled "The Iron Man," an all-metal, flexible-limbed diving dress. Despite the fact that it is made of a manganese and copper alloy said to be 40 per cent lighter than aluminum, it still weighs 880 pounds, he said.

Developing Rubber Diving Dress

Captain Craig is developing a self-contained rubber diving dress to withstand a pressure of 135 pounds to the square inch, to enable the cameramen to work inside the wreck, as the steel suit is too cumbersome. There will be a steel air bottle inside the suit containing a special mixture of gases to prevent the divers from being overcome by gas formations and oxygen poisoning. The usual compressed air containers will be used with the metal suits.

The shooting script on location calls for 22 diving days, in an open sea and with "some of the roughest diving in the world," said the captain. The factual films are to be surrounded by a story to be made in Hollywood after the crew returns from location. Thomas Whiteley of London will codirect the ocean filming with Captain Craig and will be in charge of the diving operations, for which a $100,000 budget has been allocated in production of the picture, he said.

Negotiations for the broadcasting rights are under way with Columbia Broadcasting System and National Broadcasting Company, whose John F. Royal, program director and former theatre man, is now in Glasgow conferring on arrangements. The plans call for one short wave broadcast weekly, probably via Daventry, over a period of 13 weeks. The actual production cost of 11 broadcasts on location has been estimated by the salvage company at $23,000, according to Captain Craig.

Wife a Diver Too

Except for Great Britain, where Allied Newspapers have a contract for news and news pictures of the operations, the world newspaper rights are held by United Feature Syndicate, affiliate of the Scripps-Howard chain of papers. Scores of newspapers in the United States and Canada will receive day-by-day accounts, which will be transmitted by wireless to Paris, thence by radio telephone to New York.

With release planned for next November, distribution rights have been tentatively discussed with two major companies but will not begin in earnest until plans are further along, Captain Craig said. Newsreel rights probably will be granted to the company which decides to release the feature, he added.

The motion picture crew will include Mrs. Craig, who is one of the three women divers in the world, according to the captain.

Lithuania Import License

By an extension of the Lithuanian Import license system, films are included in the list of products requiring an import license, according to a report from Vladimir Kublitzky, clerk at the American consulate in Kaunas, Lithuania, to the Department of Commerce. This was done, the report states, primarily to curtail imports of German films, and it is believed that the restriction will increase the import of films from other countries.

New Theatre for Cleveland

The Shaker, first new theatre to be built in the Greater Cleveland area in the past eight years, opened last week with a welcoming speech by the mayor of Shaker Heights. It is an 1,800 seat house, ultra modern in design and equipment and was built by Sam Stecker, Myer Fine, Abe Kramer and associates.

Educational Film Catalog

"Educational Film Catalog," containing classified title lists or resumes of 1,175 non-theatrical pictures, has been published by H. W. Wilson Company. The book, compiled by Dorothy E. Cook and Eva Cotter Rahbek-Smith, is designed mainly for educational purposes.

Gregory Circuit To Build

The Gregory Circuit of Chicago has acquired from S. W. Neall the old Orpheum building at Ottawa, Ill., and plans are under way to construct a 1,165-seat house on the site.

GARY COOPER, JEAN ARTHUR, and a big supporting cast. A CECIL B. DeMILLE Production.
GLADYS SWARTHOUT, FRED MacMURRAY, JACK OAKIE, VELOZ and YOLANDA, LYDA ROBERTI, FRANK FORREST. Directed by EDDIE SUTHERLAND, director of "Mississippi."
EDWARD ARNOLD and an all-star cast. Dramatizes one of the most exciting events in the life of the great American detective. A B. P. SCHULBERG Production.
With CHARLIE RUGGLES, MARY BOLAND, GEORGE BURNS and GRACIE ALLEN. In the same class as "International House."
The best read and probably the best liked of all the REX BEACH yarns. A pitcure that actually beats with the thunder of its great emotions. HARRY SHERMAN, ace producer of action pictures, will see to it that it gets the kind of production it deserves.
With VIRGINIA WEIDLER and BILLY LEE. From "Saturday Evening Post" story by the popular woman writer, Grace Sartwell Mason.
HOPALONG CASSIDY No. 2. BILL BOYD, JIMMY ELLISON, GEORGE HAYES, and others.
JACK BENNY, FRANCES FARMER, LOUIS DaPRON, ROBERT CUMMINGS, JOHNNY DOWNS, ELEANORE WHITNEY, MARTHA RAYE.
With W. C. FIELDS and a hand-picked cast. This is the picture that Bill has wanted to do for years. It's his idea of a real No. 1 Fields' vehicle. Based on JULIAN STREET'S famous "Need of Change."
With CHARLIE RUGGLES heading a cast of prominent Paramount featured players. Another Paul Gallico story out of the "Saturday Evening Post." An hilarious role for Ruggles as the penny pincher who suddenly awakes to generosity.
With a cast of Paramount featured players. This is the "Saturday Evening Post" story that took the prize as the trickiest mystery story of 1935.
With TOM BROWN, GAIL PATRICK, MARSHA HUNT, ELIZABETH PATTERSON. A thrilling drama set against an exciting background of life in smalltown America.
CAROLE LOMBARD, CARY GRANT, RANDOLPH SCOTT, and all-star cast. Directed by HENRY HATHAWAY, who did "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and "Trail of the Lonesome Pine." In TECHNICOLOR.
With CLAUDETTE COLBERT and a perfect supporting cast. Directed by WESLEY RUGGLES.
With BING CROSBY, GEORGE BURNS and GRACIE ALLEN, LYNNE OVERMAN. Directed by NORMAN TAUROG.
GEORGE RAFT, IDA LUPINO and an all-star cast.
With a cast of featured players. Thrilling melodrama of a murderer who ends the life of a great statesman and how he is tricked into capture. Built on original lines with several novel twists of plot that make for suspense and intense excitement.
A big musical studded by spectacular acts never seen on the screen before. Song hits, and lavish dance numbers galore. Script by KATHARINE BRUSH, S. J. and LAURA PERELMAN, and KEENE THOMPSON.
HOPALONG CASSIDY No. 3.

Third and Fourth Quarters 1936-37

TITLE	CAST AND DIRECTOR

MAJORS ADVANCE 1937 PLANS; 40 OF PARAMOUNT'S 70 NAMED

Ten Distributors Announce Offerings for 1936-37 Season; Paramount Total Highest With 70 Features Definite

The principal additional new-product and new-sales policy messages directed this week by the ten large distributors to the buying exhibitors of the country for 1936-37 were as follows:

Paramount announced 40 titles of a program of from 70 to 80 features, and the sales policies which will govern their selling.

Warner Brothers and Republic also completed their 1936-37 sales conventions, announcing, respectively, 60 and 68 features, and their new sales policies.

RKO Radio definitely decided on June 15th to 17th as the dates, and the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York as the place for its sales convention, where 48 features will likely be announced.

MGM and GB Pictures met in May, announcing 44 to 52 and 24 features, respectively, and now are rounding out story and talent phases of their programs, the while sales are progressing.

Still to meet are Universal, June 15th, New York, contemplating 36 features; Columbia, June 22nd, Chicago, possibly announcing 48 features, and United Artists, set for June 23rd, in Hollywood, where from 26 to 30 features will be detailed. These three companies, however, this week made further progress in new product plans, both from the standpoint of stories and talent, and promulgating new sales policies.

The week's developments of the ten large companies concerning new program and new policy arrangements follows in detail:

Revised Status of the Ten Largest Distributors' 1936-7 Conventions and Product Plans

COMPANY	SALES CONVENTION DATE	SALES CONVENTION PLACE	FEATURES SCHEDULED
MGM	May 11–14	Palmer House, Chicago	44 to 52
GB	May 22–25	Warwick, New York	24
Twentieth Century-Fox	May 30–31	Congress, Chicago	69
Warners (Eastern)	June 3–4	Ritz Towers, New York	60
(Western)	June 15–17	Blackstone, Chicago
Republic	June 4–6	Drake, Chicago	68
Paramount	June 5–6	Edgewater Beach, Chicago	70 to 80
RKO Radio	June 15–17	Waldorf Astoria, New York	*48
Universal	June 15–17	Astor, New York	*36
Columbia	June 22–24	Drake, Chicago	*48
United Artists	June 23–28	Hollywood	*26 to 30

* Tentative.

COLUMBIA: Preparatory to the annual sales convention, June 22nd to 23rd, at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, where 48 features will be announced for the new season, the company this week concluded negotiations for a series of MacFadden Publications short subjects on the radio programs of "The Court of Human Relations" and "The Court of Good Will." Titles of releases were also announced for the balance of this year and the beginning of the new. Mary Astor and Chester Morris were placed under long term contracts, beginning with 1936-37.

The forthcoming feature releases include: "The King Steps Out," "Counterfeit," "Blackmailer," "Night Wire," "And So They Were Married," "Devil's Squadron," "Meet Nero Wolfe," "Fer de Lance," "Theodore Goes Wild," "Lady of New York," "Campus Hero," "I Promise to Pay," "Mouthpiece by Proxy," "Purple and Fine Linen," "Weather or No," "Adventure in Manhattan," "Romance for Three," "Birth of a Hero," "There Goes the Bride," "No Gold Medal," "City of Conquest," "Golden Honeymoon," "Whispers, Inc.," "Post-office Inspector," "Innocents at Large," "The Man Who Lived Twice," "Continental," "Poker Face," "Sky Clipper," "Death Marches On," "Find the Witness" and "Partner, You're in Love."

The foregoing 32 titles, after clearing up the few remaining releases yet to be made on 1935-36 commitments, represents at least half of the features to be announced on June 22nd for 1936-37.

GB PICTURES: The sales convention already is nearly a month behind, and sales are progressing on the 24 features promised for 1936-37. Now GB Pictures reports that 16 productions, representing two-thirds of the new schedule are either completed or in production in London. Four of the 24 will be sold as Class "AA," eight as Class "A" and 12 as Class "B."

Seven are actually finished: "Nine Days a Queen," the story of Lady Jane Grey, with Cedric Hardwicke, John Mills, Nova Pilbeam and Desmond Tester; "The Marriage of Corbal," featuring Noah Beery, Nils Asther and Hugh Sinclair; "His Majesty's Pyjamas" with Clive Brook, Helen Vinson, and Mary Carlisle; "The Two of Us," with Jack Hulbert and Gina Malo; "Doomed Cargo" with Edmund Lowe and Constance Cummings; "Everything Is Thunder," starring Constance Bennett, with Douglass Montgomery and Oscar Homolka; and, "Where There's a Will," a comedy with Will Hay and Gina Malo.

Shooting is under way on "The Great Barrier," with Richard Arlen, Barry Mackay, Lilli Palmer, and Barbara Greene; "The Nelson Touch," the new George Arliss picture; "The Hidden Power," starring Sylvia Sidney and Robert Donat, being directed by Alfred Hitchcock; "Strangers on a Honeymoon," with Constance Cummings, Hugh Sinclair, and Noah Beery; "Paris Love Song," a Jessie Matthews musical; and, "Everybody Dance," a Chuck Reisner production.

The following are scheduled to go before the cameras shortly: Kipling's "Soldiers Three," which Raoul Walsh will direct, with Victor McLaglen starred; "King Solomon's Mines," with Roland Young and Paul Robeson; and, "The Hawk," in which Constance Bennett will be starred.

Continuing its friendly "invasion" of Hollywood for talent, GB this week started Raoul Walsh off to London to direct two for the new season, engaged Roland Young for "King Solomon's Mines," and signed Noah Beery for "Strangers on a Honeymoon."

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER: This company's sales convention is likewise a month past, announcing from 44 to 52 for 1936-37. This week came the report that next season Leo will not sell any of the feature lineup in star series, as heretofore. Salesmen will concentrate on the 44-52 figures rather than stress players tentatively listed, assuring exhibitors that of the minimum number of 44 there will be at least 30 "big" pictures, according to the reported plan.

For smaller circuits and individual theatre owners, the company is understood to have a new sales policy whereby sales forces will ask a minimum of four pictures at 40 per cent. The next 12 will be sold on a flat rental, the figures to be based on the percentages received for the four 35 per cent features on this season's schedule. The next 14 pictures will be scaled at 70 per cent of the flat rental asked for the previous 12, it is said.

The balance of the 14 to 22 will be subject to negotiations on a rental said to be along the lines of prices paid for similar attractions on the current program, it is understood.

M-G-M is reported asking major circuit buyers for percentage and preferred playing time for 30 of the new films. It is said that the distributor is demanding 25 per cent of the gross up to the point where the circuit clears house expenses, and from that point on there are increases in units of 10. The balance of the product is understood subject to deliberation.

PARAMOUNT: With 50 pictures definitely titled and either completely or partially cast, Neil F. Agnew, vice president in charge of sales, announced the record breaking number of 40 pictures scheduled for release by Paramount Pictures, Inc., during the first six months of 1936-37. Basing his estimate on the first half year's schedule, Mr. Agnew anticipates a total release schedule for the year of between 70 and 80 pictures.

This announcement was made at the com-

PARAMOUNT'S MONTHLY RELEASES

pany's annual sales meeting last weekend, in Chicago's Edgewater Beach Hotel. In addition to the number, Mr. Agnew emphasized "the wide variety of entertainment and the increased star power."

Paramount's sales policy next season will be flexible, as heretofore, with deals to be predicated upon individual theatres and possibilities.

The list of stars who will head the casts of this group of pictures includes: Edward Arnold, Jean Arthur, Joan Bennett, Jack Benny, John Boles, George Burns and Gracie Allen, Bob Burns, Claudette Colbert, Gary Cooper, Bing Crosby, Marlene Dietrich, Irene Dunne, W. C. Fields, Gladys George, Harold Lloyd, Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray, Adolphe Menjou and Verree Teasdale, Jack Oakie, George Raft, Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland, Sylvia Sidney, Gladys Swarthout and Mae West.

Newcomers this season to the roster of Paramount stars are: Edward Arnold, Jean Arthur, Jack Benny, Bob Burns, Gladys George and Irene Dunne. Jack Benny and Bob Burns, both radio stars, join four other air performers on the company's list—Bing Crosby, George Burns and Gracie Allen and Gladys Swarthout.

"In planning this group of pictures, Paramount production executives have striven for the maximum in diversification," an announcement said. "The pictures range from lavishly staged musicals and action-packed out-of-door pictures to melodramas and comedies of both the romantic and domestic type."

At least two "major" pictures of different types are slated for release each month of the season.

The 40 pictures listed for release during the first half of 1936-37 are as follows:

August Releases

Seven to be released in August:

The Texas Ranger, with Fred MacMurray, Jack Oakie, Jean Parker, Lloyd Nolan and Bennie Bartlett; directed by King Vidor.

Paramount Convention

Attending Paramount's convention at the Edgewater Beach Hotel, besides Mr. Agnew, who presided, were: the home office delegation, including Joseph J. Unger, Charles Reagan, Robert M. Gilham, Don Velde, Herman Lorber, Arthur Dunne, Jack Roper, Fred LeRoy, and G. B. J. Frawley, and the following eastern district sales managers: Milton Kusell, William Erbb and P. A. Bloch.

In addition the sales meeting was attended by District Managers Harry Goldstein, Oscar Morgan, Jack Dugger, J. E. Fontaine, R. C. Libeau, Hugh Braly, M. H. Lewis and Ben Blotcky, and M. A. Milligan, of Canada.

Robert Gillham, Paramount advertising director, told the delegates that the ad budget for 1936-37 will be increased to permit heavy billboard campaigns on "The General Dies at Dawn" and "Texas Ranger." He also detailed plans for extensive increased use of newspaper advertising on a cooperative basis.

Mr. Agnew completed a review of the product planned for next year and answered sales policy queries by the district managers. He said he felt that Paramount had a better lineup for next season than the company had had in years and that with the studio organization rapidly being strengthened, the sales force could be confident of deliveries which matched the advance plans for the new season.

Discussing his plans for "The Plainsman," Director Cecil B. De Mille said shooting on the picture, which will star Gary Cooper, with Jean Arthur and George Bancroft, would start July 15. He said it was being planned on "super-special" lines.

William LeBaron, Paramount's Hollywood studio head, was scheduled to address the final session but was unable to leave Hollywood because of the present production rush.

Regional meetings of the Paramount field sales force will be called in the near future by district managers in all key territories at which the new season plans will be placed before the salesmen.

Regional district meetings have been dated for this week and next. Milton Kusell, New York state district manager, left by plane for Buffalo to open immediately a two-day conclave with the Albany and Buffalo sales forces at the Buffalo exchange. On Thursday he will confer with the New York, New Jersey and Brooklyn salesmen.

The Atlanta, Memphis, Jacksonville, Charlotte and New Orleans salesmen and branch heads will meet this week in Atlanta. Boston, New Haven and Maine forces will also convene this week at the Copley-Plaza, Boston.

Four different western sessions will be held

June 12-13. In Chicago, the Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, and Indianapolis men will discuss the new lineup. The Kansas City, St. Louis, Omaha and Des Moines sales staffs will gather at the Kansas City exchange. The Salt Lake City and Denver men will get together in Salt Lake, while in San Francisco the Seattle, Portland, Los Angeles and San Francisco groups will go over the new product details. On the same dates the Dallas exchange will be the meeting quarters for the Dallas, San Antonio and Oklahoma City men.

On Thursday the Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Columbus and Cincinnati exchange personnel will meet at the William Penn, Pittsburgh. The Philadelphia force has set Friday for the special sales talks. On June 16 the Washington salesmen will hear the new sales policy at the Shoreham Hotel. The Minneapolis and Sioux Falls staffs will convene at Minneapolis on June 12-13.

Meanwhile, at the studios in Hollywood, Harry Sherman finished the last of the current series of "Hopalong Cassidys"; Wesley Ruggles' directorial option was taken up for another year; Fanchon, of Fanchon and Marco, joined William LeBaron's executive staff as an advisor on musicals; Ernst Lubitsch was organizing his new production unit and reading stories for the new season; Harold Lloyd signed a new producing contract for one picture annually; B. P. Schulberg incorporated his new producing unit; John Hammill was assigned to manage the Lubitsch unit, and production was proceeding on nine features at one clip.

RADIO PICTURES: The Waldorf-Astoria in New York will play host to the several hundred delegates to the annual sales convention of RKO Radio Pictures, June 15th to 17th. Jules Levy, vice-president and general sales manager of RKO Distributing Corporation, this week selected that hotel as the place for the daily sessions at which he will announce the company's ambitious plans for the coming year. Business meetings will be held in the "Sert Dining Room."

"The convention will be the largest and most important in the history of RKO and will welcome sales managers and other representatives from every city in the world," said a company announcement.

While it is expected that RKO at its convention will announce a program of some 48 features, this much became certain during the week: RKO will have 106 short subjects, 18 to 24 Walt Disney cartoons and 104 issues of Pathe News on its new season schedule.

The short subject list includes approximately 36 two-reelers to be made in Hollywood, 33 subjects from Van Buren, 13 March of Time, the Major Bowes Amateur series, 12 Pathe Reviews and seven Pathe Topics. The 33 from Van Beuren compares with 46 which RKO has taken from this producer every season since 1930. The change results from the addition of the Disney cartoons and the elimination of 13 Van Beuren color cartoons for next season.

Arrangements were closed recently under which Pathe granted an extension of the maturity on past due credits advanced to Van Beuren some time ago. The agreement calls for payments on the indebtedness at regular intervals.

When RKO takes the sales of 18 Walt Disney shorts next season, no specific number of Mickey Mouse or Silly Symphony subjects will be listed.

The reason for this, Roy Disney explained, is because certain stories planned for Mickey Mouse may be dropped, the same holding true for the second series. For the current season, Disney is making nine of each subject, and while it is likely the same number may hold next season there is nothing definite. It is also possible that 12 Mickey Mouses may be made and six Silly Symphony subjects, or vice versa, Disney said.

With 15 animators already sent to the coast. Disney said he planned to sign up from 15 to 20 more.

Increasing its summer production activity, RKO Radio will begin camera work on six additional features on June 15th. They are: "Portrait of a Rebel," which will co-star Katharine Hepburn and Herbert Marshall; "We Who Are About to Die," written by David Lamson from his experience as a prisoner in San Quentin; "Count Pete," a Cosmopolitan Magazine story with Ann Sothern and Gene Raymond; "Daddy and I," a comedy drama based on Elizabeth Jordan's novel and starring Anne Shirley; "Grand Jury," a Thomas Lennon story; and, "Don't Turn 'Em Loose," Ferdinand Reyher's arraignment of the prison parole system.

Scenarios and preliminary work for the six pictures have been completed, and supervisors and directors assigned. These, together with films already in production, will utilize every stage and all the facilities of the recently enlarged studio.

REPUBLIC: In addition to the titles of the 52 features originally reported by Republic Pictures for 1936-37, and reported on page 76 of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, June 6th, it became apparent at the end of the second annual sales convention, last weekend, that the company would have, instead, a total of 68. Nat Levine, production head, announced the acquisition of eight Bob Steele and eight Johnny Mack Brown westerns.

Previously announced were: two "Anniversary Specials," the "Jubilee Six," 24 "Gilt-Edge Pacemakers," four color productions, two Gene Autry "specials," six Gene Autry musical westerns; eight William Colt MacDonald westerns, and four serials.

Mr. Levine told the delegates that he plans to use "outstanding players on the coast as well as a number of new players from the new Republic stock company," which is now in the process of building.

The convention was called to order by President W. Ray Johnston last Thursday morning, concluding Friday, with Saturday devoted to regional meetings. The meetings were held in the Drake Hotel in Chicago.

Republic will ask for 100 per cent increases in rentals on specials and increases in proportion on other products over this year's prices,

FIRST WARNER MEET IS HELD

J. J. Milstein, general sales manager, told the company's sales force.

"This will be the sales policy for the coming year," he said, predicting a sales record for Republic.

Sam Hacker told the group how to write contracts and to avoid rejections on technical points. G. C. Schaefer talked on exchange operation, while Edward Finney discussed plans for press books, larger advertising campaigns and exploitations.

Joe Cooper, exploiteer from Seattle, spoke on individual exchange exploitation policy and suggested that the plan be adopted generally. William Saal gave the men a resume on exploitation and "Frankie and Johnnie."

The session was highlighted by an address by Nat Levine, production head, who said: "We have 17 stories in preparation today, two pictures shooting, and six to eight of the new season's product will be in exchanges by September 1.

"Our production staff is hitting on high. We have everything we need, studio personnel and finances. We have been spending more on production than the franchise distributors have been bringing in, but our prospects are most excellent and our finance people have confidence in us.

"We are no longer considered an independent company. Our facilities and work are of major calibre. We have 21 players under contract and in the last 10 days we signed Olsen and Johnson, Eddie Quillan and Chic Sale. We have 42 on the writing staff, mostly on long term contracts."

Mr. Levine explained the new program in detail, predicting that the biggest picture will be "Follow Your Heart," with Marion Talley and Michael Bartlett. It will be ready for delivery August 1. Shooting starts next week.

M. J. Siegel, executive at the coast studio, spoke about the work of the production forces.

A general discussion was held in which branch managers and salesmen considered methods of selling the program outlined by Mr. Levine.

W. Ray Johnston introduced Norton Ritchey, who spoke on Republic in foreign territories. He told of the rapid expansion of the organization's activities in that direction, describing details involving complete representation in such countries as Cuba, Argentine, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Egypt, Persia, Syria, Denmark, Panama, Salvador, Nicaragua, Guatemala, South America, British West Indies, Jamaica and Mexico.

L. E. Kalker, Republic representative in Great Britain, analyzed conditions there, saying British Lion is concentrating on distribution through their national organizations, with headquarters in leading cities in England and the British Empire.

Other speakers included Herman Gluckman, who compared his Republic franchise in New York to an insurance policy. Arthur C. Bromberg of Atlanta foresaw a bright future for Republic. Carl Floyd of Florida gave a sales analysis on general conditions. Floyd St. John of California discussed the strides made by the company since its inception. Oscar Hanson, Canadian distribution head, dwelt on the strength of the company based on the cooperation among its franchise holders. Nat Lefton of Ohio gave an analysis of Republic's serials. Edward N. Schnitzer, eastern division manager, reviewed the company's progress during its first year. Claude Ezell of Texas emphasized the value to the company of its "partnership" organization.

Walter Vincent, chairman of the board predicted that Republic's new product would command increased first run playing time. E. H. Goldstein, vice-president, emphasized the solidarity of the organization which he said had been realized through linking closely the exchanges with the home office.

A dinner in honor of Nat Levine was held at the Drake and was attended by the entire delegation. H. J. Yates of Consolidated Film closed the convention with a talk in which he assured the meeting that financing of the company's new season program was on hand.

Republic is expected to double last year's business in the United Kingdom next season, Sam Smith, British franchise holder, told the delegates. He stated that the company's lineup for 1936-37 had many pictures with appeal to the English public.

Mr. Smith announced that British Lion would probably have six of its features released through Republic this season.

Edward M. Schnitzer, eastern division sales head, added that he expects 2,000 additional contracts on the current season's schedule and a wide increase on the new deals.

The delegation included some 300 persons from the home office, studio, field sales forces, exchange managers, franchise holders and others.

TWENTIETH CENTURY-FOX: With the return of the Twentieth Century-Fox delegation from the sales convention, held last week in Chicago, the company announced new contracts with Jed Prouty, for four features in 1936-37, three to be in the "Jones Family" series; with John Cromwell, director, for two years, starting with "The McKinley Case," for 1936-37; with Samuel Engel, as a producer of six in the new season, and a new contract with Bill Robinson, player.

Fox, at its convention, announced a program of 69 features for 1936-37. The titles were listed on page 78 of the June 6th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

UNITED ARTISTS: Preliminary to the annual sales convention, June 23rd to 28th, in Hollywood, where some 26 to 30 features will be announced for 1936-37, United Artists producers this week announced the following new-season developments: David O. Selznick, of Selznick International, selected Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar," with Ronald Colman as Brutus, for 1936-37; Mr. Selznick then appointed William H. Wright, former assistant to Harry Cohn, at Columbia, to a similar capacity on his Selznick International staff, the while Alexander Korda, in London, started work on "Rembrandt," with Charles Laughton, for the new season. And in Hollywood, Samuel Goldwyn interrupted construction on one of Hollywood's largest stages, for his use, to announce the signing of Mary Nash, of the New York legitimate theatre, for Edna Ferber's "Come and Get It," for 1936-37.

UNIVERSAL: After signing Mary Alice Rice on a long term, and Edmund Grainger, to continue as a producer, Universal's new Cowdin-Cochrane-Rogers administration furthered their plans for the sales convention, to be held June 15th to 17th, at the Hotel Astor in New York, possibly announcing 36 features.

Acting swiftly following their recent visit to the studios at Universal City, the new managers this week effected several changes at the California producing headquarters.

Construction and stage supervision were split into two departments with Robert P. Knoche succeeding Archie Hall as superintendent of construction. Mr. Hall has left the studio. George Dixon has been made stage manager and will have charge of all grips and general set management during production.

John E. Otterson, Jr., has been made head of the art department succeeding Charles D. Hall, who has also left the lot. The property department has been split under two heads with Russ Gausman heading props and Ralph Morgan placed in charge of the prop shop, supervising construction of properties. Julius Bernheim has finished as associate producer with the studio.

WARNER BROTHERS: The first of Warners' two 1936-37 sales conventions came to a conclusion in New York, late last week, at the Ritz Towers, where 60 features were announced for Warner Brothers Pictures, First National Pictures, Cosmopolitan Pictures and Vitagraph. All of the titles were listed on page 83 in the June 6th issue of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

The second convention, for the western section, will be held from June 15th to 17th, at Chicago's Blackstone Hotel, where Gradwell Sears, western sales director, will preside, aided by S. Charles Einfeld, advertising and publicity director; Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone sales director; Sam Sax, in charge of Vitaphone short subject production in the east; Leo Blank, newly appointed district manager in the midwest, and Ed Selzer, California studio press agent.

Declaring that "a gamble now upon the future of America is the best gamble in the world," H. M. Warner, president, called upon business and industrial leaders to loosen the purse strings and make the present period one of progress and development.

He spoke at a luncheon in the Ritz Towers that marked the conclusion of the convention.

"We've seen good times and bad, years of prosperity and depression, but somehow the nation always comes through," he added.

"Remembering that, we should not be shortsighted and magnify our problem. Instead, we should be planning for the future, making this a period of progress rather than of stagnation."

Business in general might well follow the example of the motion picture industry, he said, declaring that it has expanded proportionately greater during the past year or two than any other.

"I believe the nation would be a lot further along the road to genuine prosperity if other industries likewise had loosened the purse strings, put the okay on the blue prints and shown a willingness to gamble on the future," Mr. Warner reported.

He reported that Warner Brothers has completed one building and expansion program, and immediately is beginning another one. "When it is concluded," he said, "the Warner Hollywood plant will be the largest and most modern film producing establishment in the world."

The motion picture has assumed a new and important social and educational significance, he concluded.

Warner Brothers and affiliated companies elevated four featured players to stardom, announced a worldwide campaign to attract more persons to motion picture theatres, decided to increase the advertising budget to "a record-breaking total" and planned the exhibition of its 60 1936-37 films during the convention, which was attended by some 75 delegates from the east and six foreign countries.

Telegrams were dispatched to the four feature players announcing that beginning Friday they will be classed in the upper brackets, as stars. The four are Anita Louise, Errol Flynn, Olivia de Havilland and Bette Davis.

Announcement was made by S. Charles Einfeld, director of advertising and publicity, and vice-president of the sales organization, that the advertising budget for the coming season would be larger than any in the company's history, and that it would be concentrated almost entirely in newspapers.

A large share of the campaign for the season, he said, will be directed at persons who do not habitually attend motion pictures.

EIGHT POINTS IN ALLIED PROGRAM

business. Radicalism has no place in any organization. The federal government should keep out of our problems.

"But, if round table discussions cannot achieve results, independent exhibitor organizations cannot be blamed if they seek relief from outside."

"It is important that Allied independent exhibitors marshal their forces not only in those states where they are organized, but also where they are not organized and with great strength, properly expressed through their leaders, who shall not be radicals but shall be business men and shall discuss their problems with producer-distributor leaders, confining their discussions to the merits of the case and not to personalities."

Mr. Yamins' remarks were at variance with Abram F. Myer's plea for immediate relief through federal interference. Some interpreted this as a rift between Allied's president and general counsel. Al Steffes, however, cleared the atmosphere when he said this apparent "difference" was nothing more than strategy to arouse interest and discussion among the delegates, and that all is peaceful within the Allied ranks.

Weeks Traces Double Billing

Under the subject title, "The Outlook for the Coming Year," George W. Weeks, general sales manager for Gaumont British, said that the "picture business must be going ahead because the affiliates are going after more theatres."

The socalled "evil" of double bills, Mr. Weeks laid at the door of the producers who thought they were outsmarting the subsequent-run theatres when they introduced duals in some of the key situations.

Giving due credit to the exhibition problems enumerated by Allied's leaders, Mr. Weeks told the delegates that in his opinion the only real problem of the exhibitor is the scarcity of "fine" pictures, and that in order to deliver the necessary supply, it will take the production not only of America, but of all countries.

Hardy Pledges Cooperation

"The department of justice will use all the resources at its disposal to correct whatever evils there are in the motion picture industry," said Russell Hardy, Assistant U. S. Attorney General, present at the invitation of Allied.

Although Mr. Hardy said he was not present in an official capacity as representative of the Department of Justice, it is understood that his statements carried the formal approval of Attorney General Cummings, of Washington.

"Since I have been here at this convention," Mr. Hardy said, "I am deeply impressed with the fact that your most vital problem is that of exhibitors versus distributors." He inferred that only through federal action could the independent exhibitors get relief in this connection.

Mr. Hardy reviewed the St. Louis case, which he prosecuted for the Government and which resulted in giving relief to the plaintiffs, Fanchon and Marco, against Warner, Paramount and RKO.

Cites Solution on Product

The basis of causes in the St. Louis case, Mr. Hardy pointed out, was the alleged conspiracy of the producers to interfere with the supply of pictures to the St. Louis first-run Ambassador, Missouri and Grand Central theatres for the purpose of allowing Warner Brothers to acquire these theatres for themselves, and to assure Warner Brothers of a steady supply of the better pictures.

Warner Brothers, prior to the prosecution of the St. Louis case, controlled 50 per cent of the films available in that city, the attorney general said, although the company owned only 25 per cent of the theatres in the city with only 14 per cent of the city's total seating capacity.

The St. Louis case resulted in guaranteeing the Fanchon and Marco theatres a steady flow of product over a considerable period of time.

"This situation, which is not confined to St. Louis but may exist elsewhere, is not the result of competition," Mr. Hardy told the independent exhibitors. "It is the result of the economic power of the producers, who have resources of $700,000,000."

Of critics who have contended that the differences between exhibitors and producer-distributors is a purely private controversy and should be fought out in local courts and not by the federal government, Mr. Hardy said. "They have lost sight of the fundamental purpose of the federal anti-trust laws, which are to provide diffusion of wealth among the population by protecting the rights of the individual."

"The anti-trust laws were made to help the small operator against oppressive big business and the Government is authorized to enforce those laws."

Cites Circuits' Advantages

Mr. Hardy listed the advantages enjoyed by the affiliated theatres as follows: they control 1,900 of the best theatres in the country; they enjoy preferential and lucrative use of films through their physical advantages and, quoting Judge Thatcher, "their irresistible economic force consolidated by combination," the case with which a few in the industry may conspire against the many where the entire is in the hands of as few as eight units, making it easy for the few to regulate the industry."

"It seems to me," said Mr. Hardy, "that a combination representing a fifty per cent interest in the sixth largest industry in the country is a formidable and well night irresistible thing unless the prestige and the influence of the federal government is interposed to protect the independent exhibitor against oppression."

As a "cure" for such practices, and to prevent recurrences elsewhere of situations like the St. Louis case, Mr. Hardy recommended that the independent exhibitors procure specific prohibition by legislature of such practices. Furthermore, inasmuch as the present anti-trust laws can be prosecuted only through the medium of conspiracy, and conspiracy is one of the most difficult facts to establish, Mr. Hardy recommended that the anti-trust laws be changed to eliminate conspiracy as the basis of prosecution and in its stead replace as a basis, "Public Interest."

"The sixth largest interest using the agency of interstate commerce is not beyond the reach of control of the federal government for Public Interest and in my opinion, such legislation would be valid under the Constitution of the United States," he concluded.

Solidification of independents through well-knit organizations, free from "producer-subsidized" groups for the preservation of their rights keynoted the address of Mr. Myers.

Outlining eight principles which make up the Allied program, Myers said:

"1.—The independent exhibitors have made a major contribution to the growth and development of the motion picture industry and are deserving of as much consideration as any other branch of the industry.

"2.—Since their interests frequently conflict with those of producers, distributors and producer-affiliated theatres, the independent exhibitors must maintain purely independent trade associations for the protection of their interests.

"3.—While the independent exhibitors are willing to cooperate with organizations representing other branches of the industry in matters of common concern, such cooperation must be rendered through organizations and leaders of their own choosing and not through producer-subsidized organizations and leaders.

"4.—The motion picture business is a legitimate business and its affairs should be so conducted as to inspire confidence within the industry and command the respect of the public.

"5.—Realization of the ideal of the previous paragraph calls for the observance of ethical business principles as distinguished from the use of shady political methods in both internal and public relationships.

"6.—The operation of theatres is properly the function and responsibility of exhibitors who live in and are intimately acquainted with the communities they serve, and these exhibitors should be left unmolested in all matters calling for the exercise of discretion as to what is best suited for the needs and desires of such communities.

"7.—Chief among the trade practices which interfere with the rendering by exhibitors of the maximum of service to the public and tend to vest control of operating policy in persons remote from such communities are:

"(a) Compulsory block booking and blind selling.

"(b) Unreasonable protection and clearance.

"(c) Favoritism in leasing and delivering films to affiliated theatres.

"(d) Compulsory designation of dates.

"(e) Regulation of admission prices of subsequent-run independent theatres in favor of prior-run affiliated theatres.

"8.—Independent exhibitors are warranted in employing all necessary legal means to carry the foregoing principles into effect including campaigns of legislation and litigation and the setting up or encouraging of additional sources of supply.

"While the principles of Allied are unchanging and unchangeable," Myers added, "it is the province and duty of the great body of exhibitors who make up the association, directly and through their representatives, to translate those principles into definite programs of action.

"The greatest value derived from national conventions is the crystallization of exhibitor opinion for the advice and guidance of the officers and directors during the year. The bad feature is that too many exhibitors, having expressed themselves in this fashion, call it a day and leave it to the national officers to carry on without further encouragement or support from them."

Outlining what he termed the causes of the gradual elimination of independent production and independent exhibition by eight large corporations making 80 per cent of the films in the United States, Ray Tesch of Milwaukee gave the detailed histories of anti-preferred playdate bills passed in Wisconsin and in Ohio and urged that similar bills be introduced during the coming year in every legislature of the Union, regardless of whether or not such state has an Allied unit.

P. J. Wood, Columbus, Ohio, described Paramount's new policy to procure rental service contracts on all Paramount accessories and recommended to the members that, in order to stop a spreading of this policy to other producer companies and to prevent a monopoly, the Allied States Association go on record as opposing the signing of the Paramount accessories agreement.

Mr. Wood listed as the "evil features" of the Paramount accessories contract the payment in advance for accessories at higher cost than at present; no cash refunds—only credits and these to be determined by the Paramount accessories manager; all accessories to be returned five days after the end of the run or no credits allowed; complicated bookkeeping required to keep a record of charges and credits.

"If the plan is successful with Paramount, other producers will adopt it or plans similar to it. This will eliminate the independent poster rental companies, and the cost of accessories will be increased to every exhibitor by an amount ranging between $300 and $500 per year," Mr. Wood added.

Banker-Exhibitor Speaks

William M. James of Columbus, Ohio, a banker and exhibitor, was the headline attraction at the banquet, for which 550 reservations were made, at the Hollendon Hotel on Thursday evening. At the speakers table he was flanked by Governor Martin L. Davey, Sidney Samuelson, Hon. Russell Hardy, Hon. Daniel Bertrand, Abram F. Myers, H. M. Richey and Everett Steinbuck, manager of Loew's State Theatre and a personal friend of Governor Davey.

The exhibits on the mezzanine floor of the Hollendon overflowed into the convention hall where National Screen Service had displays. In the mezzanine space there were 31 exhibits including those of National Theatre Supply Company, Superior Supply Company, Oliver Supply Company, National Carbon Company, Smith & Setron, Republic Pictures, Neon Electric Clock Company, Art Craft Sign Company, Metro Premiums, Carrier Engineering Corp., National Screen Service, RCA Photophone, Simplex Acme Projector Co., Bank Night, Movie Sweepstakes, Alexander Smith Carpets, Emerling & Kahn Windowcraft, Gallo Studios, International Projector Company.

Golf prizes at the Convention tournament, donated by LeRoy Langford, manager of National Theatre Supply Company and Nat L. Lefton, of Republic Pictures, were won by W. J. Walker, Crafton theatre, Crafton, Pa., and J. H. Morris, of the Rittman theatre, Rittman, N. J.

Yamins Returns to Myers Plan

Having previously during the convention advocated adjustment of exhibitor-producer problems via the round table method, President Yamins subsequently answered Mr. Myers by loudly proclaiming that, "the only way to get anywhere is to fight for it," and "I personally feel we should take a short cut and ask for government regulation of this industry; I much prefer government regulation of our business with a fair return on investment than destruction of our business by the men into whose coffers we have fed gold for years."

Commenting on the Neely-Pettengill anti-block booking bill Mr. Yamins said, "I doubt if it will do much for us. I still say buying pictures individually won't prevent theatre expansion. Our greatest problem is the cutting off of our investment without any consideration."

P. S. Harrison's digest of the product situation for the current year was read by Chairman Richey.

Mr. Harrison, after reviewing the practices of each major company, concluded that there is no such thing as a national sales policy.

The score charge is a profitable racket, according to him. Taking one company as a standard, he showed a clear profit of over $9,000 was made on only 74 exhibitors in a year, over and above what the producer paid for score charges to ASCAP.

As to the box office performances of pictures during 1935-36, the conclusion was reached that out of a total of 217 features, only 10 could be classed as excellent and as excellent-to-very-good. Of the ten, three came from MGM, three from RKO, two from 20th Century-Fox, one from Columbia, and one from Paramount. Only three companies, MGM, Twentieth Century-Fox and Columbia, delivered their promised pictures, according to the Harrison digest.

Mr. Harrison said he had no cure for whatever sales or product inconsistencies it might reveal. "I just wanted to air these facts," Mr. Harrison told the convention.

His final advice to the exhibitors was, "Look over your contracts for trick clauses."

Asked what exhibitors could do about it if they did find trick clauses in their contracts Mr. Harrison answered that if they recognize trick clauses they can at least signify their attitude to the distributor.

Friday, the last day of the session, was given over to the report of committees.

Not Exclusively for Allied

Previous trade paper announcements had taken the tang out of the announcement in which Edward Golden told of the Chesterfield-Invincible tie-up with Allied theatres.

What Mr. Golden did make emphatic, however, was that Chesterfield-Invincible will not produce pictures exclusively for Allied theatres. Allied offered the inducement for Chesterfield-Invincible to make pictures, Mr. Golden added.

James Caffrey, of the Federal Housing Administration, met with exhibitors individually, telling how to secure government loans for either new theatre construction, remodeling or reconditioning. Theatres are in the classification provided for in the FHA whereby loans in excess of $2,000 are made. The only requirement to secure such a loan is proof of ability to pay it back within a reasonable period of time.

Committee reports declared:

ZONING AND CLEARANCE: "This is a local problem and should be adjusted locally."

SCORE CHARGES: "These are a racket and should be abolished."

THEATRE EXPANSION: Producer-exhibitors should be removed from the exhibition field entirely. Independent acquisition of large circuits should also be curbed.

GOOD WILL: There will be no change in Allied's cooperation with public groups.

A resolution was presented by R. R. Bair, Indianapolis, remembering the late Frank Rembusch, of Shelbyville, Ind., Frank Rembusch, Jr., was present at the convention.

Daniel Bertrand, of New York, who made a federal survey of the motion picture industry for the NRA, gave the conventioneers a resume of his findings and suggested that the ails of the independent exhibitor could best be cured, in his opinion, by a federal motion picture commission.

This federal commission, in the opinion of Mr. Bertrand, should operate through regional government appointees with headquarters in the strategic key cities of the countries.

Arthur K. Howard, of Boston, said that through a tieup with Lloyds, international insurance company, theatre liability insurance rates could be sharply reduced.

Jerome Kern Joins Radio

Jerome Kern, composer of "Show Boat," "Cat and the Fiddle," "Sally" and "Roberta" among other Broadway successes, has deserted New York for Hollywood and will devote his time to compositions for future musicals to be produced by Radio.

Strike in Paris Spreads but Early Settlement is Seen

The stay-in strike in Paris, brought on by the general industrial walkout upon the resumption of power of Premier Blum, spread over the weekend to include the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Olympia, Warners' Apollo and the Cineac newsreel circuit and some district houses. The staff demands in some instances were granted and even though the strike did spread to the above named houses, the Gaumont Palace and Rex and all Gaumont circuit houses have reopened.

The laboratories are still closed, as are Osso and G.F.T.A., distributors.

An early settlement under official pressure is looked for with the granting of workers' demands for a 40-hour week and salary increases, with collective bargaining contracts, paid vacations and recognition of the unions.

The theatres that are open, however, are doing excellent business because of the inability of persons living in the outlying districts of Paris to reach their homes. Busses, the principal means of transportation, are not running because of a lack of fuel, thus stranding thousands along the boulevards.

Fox Bankruptcy Hearing June 19

First hearing in the bankruptcy petition of William Fox has been set for June 19 in Atlantic City before Robert E. Steele, Federal referee in bankruptcy. At that time Mr. Fox is to be examined as to his financial status, and one or possibly three trustees will be elected. After that his estate will be administered for the beenfit of creditors.

The petition sets forth that Mr. Fox is willing to surrender all his property for the benefit of creditors, except the personal effects exempted by law, and that he is temporarily without occupation. It lists his total liabilities as $9,535,261.91 and assets as $1,590,100.

Creditors of Mr. Fox may contest his voluntary petition in bankruptcy on the ground that the former motion picture executive is not insolvent, it was indicated this week by a prominent creditor of Mr. Fox.

Hitchcock Gets Medal

Alfred Hitchcock, Gaumont British director, has been awarded, for the second time, the British Film Medal for his work on "39 Steps." The award is made annually for the best British film of the year on the basis of a nation-wide ballot.

Steuer Is Awarded Fee Of $100,000 by Court

Referee Frederick Spigelberg in the New York supreme court has recommended that Max D. Steuer be awarded a fee of $100,000 for legal services he performed on behalf Knickerbocker Theatres, Inc., and the Clinton-Apollo Theatres Corporation.

The lawyer originally asserted that he should receive a fee of $150,000 for his negotiations in the suit over theatre leases brought by the corporations against the Greater New York vaudeville Theatre Corporation, an RKO subsidiary. Mr. Steuer's client refused to pay the fee, stating that it was out of proportion with a judgment of only $45,000 which he obtained for them in their case.

Mr. Steuer contended that the $45,000 judgment was inconsequential because his services actually compelled the defendant in the suit to fulfill a contract amounting to $2,340,000 with his client.

National Decency Legion Classifies 16 New Films

Of 16 new pictures reviewed and classified by the National Legion of Decency in its list for the current week, 10 were classed as unobjectionable for general patronage, four as unobjectionable for adults and two as objectionable in part. The new pictures reviewed, with their classifications, follow.

Class A-1, "Unobjectionable for General Patronage": "Below the Deadline," "Early to Bed," "The Green Pastures," "The Last Outlaw," "The Song of China," "Thoroughbred," "Undercover Man," "The White Angel," "Bunker Bean," "Aces and Eights." Class A-2, "Unobjectionable for Adults": "Fury," "Palm Springs," "Private Number," "She-Devil Island." Class B, "Objectionable in Part": "Das Verlorene Tal," "Go-Get-'Em Haines."

WARNERS, MGM, RKO, PARAMOUNT WIN AMPA AWARDS FOR "BEST ADS"

Plaques for "Outstanding Ad Achievements" to Quanchi, at RKO; Kallis (Paramount); Tisman (Warners) and MGM

Advertising Association President Commends Industry Upon Increased Excellence of Copy

Outstanding achievements in motion picture advertising were acclaimed on Thursday by the Association of Motion Picture Advertisers in New York in the presentation of awards in AMPA's first annual contest to determine the best work of motion picture advertising, publicity and exploitation men during 1935-36. The awards were made at a special meeting of the AMPA in the Laurel Room of the Hotel Astor, as follows:

FOR BEST ADVERTISEMENT ADDRESSED TO PUBLIC THROUGH THE NEWSPAPERS: Won by Leo Quanchi, of RKO-Radio, for an advertiesement on "The Little Minister," starring Katharine Hepburn. For aid and supervision upon this advertisement, Ralph Lund, of the same company, received the certificate of merit. Honorable mention went to an ad for "A Midsummer Night's Dream," written in the offices of Warner Brothers.

FOR BEST ADVERTISEMENT ADDRESSED TO THE FILM TRADE: Won by Moe Kallis, of Paramount, for a 16-page institutional insert on "How to Pack 'em In." Two honorable mentions in this division went to the Warner Brothers for "G-Man" copy, one went to RKO-Radio for "Becky Sharp" and one to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer for an insert upon coming product.

FOR BEST POSTER COPY: Won by Josef Tisman, of Warner Brothers, for a 24-sheet on "Alibi Ike." Honorable mentions went to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer on "Reckless" and to Paramount on "Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

FOR BEST PRESS SHEET: To Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, for "Mutiny on the Bounty." A very close second, which received an honorable mention, was the press sheet on "A Midsummer Night's Dream" by Warner Brothers.

Warner Leads in Awards

In point of company winnings, Warner Brothers' employes received top rating, having captured one plaque and four honorable mentions. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and RKO-Radio tied for second, MGM winning one plaque and two honorable mentions and RKO a plaque, a certificate of merit and and an honorable mention. Paramount received a plaque and one honorable mention.

The awards on Thursday were presented by John Benson, president of the American Association of Advertising Agents, who commended the motion picture advertisers upon the increased excellence of their copy in recent years, both in advertising and publicity. This is, of course, in contrast to the old story that superlative adjectives and lurid illustrations constituted the major portion of film advertising for several years.

The plaques were designed by Anthony De Francisci, sculptor, and are gold finished in bas relief. They are six inches in diameter and are mounted upon rosewood. The awards will be given annually.

Close Rivalry

Thousands of pieces of copy written in the offices of every nationally-known motion picture producer and distributor were entered into the contest, which was launched soon after the first of the year, and leading advertising and publicity experts, many of them from outside the industry, were judges.

The Judges

The judges were as follows: Martin Quigley, publisher; Frank Quinn, N. Y. Metropolitan advertising manager for Philco Radio; Ben Nash, designer, poster artist and color expert; Walter Vincent, exhibitor; Jay Emanuel and J. W. Alicoate, publishers; Joseph E. Hanson, executive vice-president, Frank Presbrey Advertising Agency; Hugh Philbin, sales manager and assistant to Barron G. Collier; Harry Carey, Time Magazine; Gordon S. White, president, AMPA; Elias Sugarman, Billboard; Ray Gallagher, AMPA Committee on Awards, and on staff of MOTION PICTURE HERALD; Fred G. Cooper, designer, poster artist, color expert; Karl Egge, advertising director, Bloomingdale's; William A. Adriance, art director, Dorrance Sullivan and Company, advertising; Tom Hamlin, Chick Lewis and Joe Gallagher, motion picture trade press; George T. Delacorte, Jr., George Batchellor, Chesterfield; James MacFarland, Music Hall, and Maurice Kann, Motion Picture Daily. Gerald Lauck, vice-president, N. W. Ayer and Son; Bernarr Macfadden, publisher; Charles McD. Puckette, assistant to the publisher, New York Times; and Ed Kuykendall, Edward M. Fay, W. G. Van Schmus, Harry Brandt, Si Fabian, all exhibitors.

Browne Proposes New IA Setup

With the aim of effectuating a means of amicably settling intra-union disputes, George E. Browne, president of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Pitcure Machine Operators of the United States and Canada, proposed revision of the alliance's constitution and bylaws, as the organization's 33rd convention got under way in Kansas City on Monday.

Following week-long sessions of the executive board, Mr. Browne submitted a report saying he considered the changes necessary because the present constitution cannot keep pace with new legislation and legal rulings. He felt that the new constitution would reduce the numbers of members seeking redress in court by the inclusion of provisions for exhausting all remedies within the IATSE before court action is taken.

Urges Local 306 Curbs

Mr. Browne outlined the provisions to the membership on Wednesday, and declared that it will be necessary at the earliest possible opportunity to adjust the disorganized situation in Local 306 in New York. He said some means must be found to curb unofficial groups of politically ambitious members in the New York local who have embarrassed the general office in the past.

Mr. Browne was expected to be reelected before the convention ended late this week. No opposition ticket was in sight.

Approximately 1,000 delegates were attending the sessions, held in the municipal auditorium.

Mr. Browne told the membership that he regretted that of 14,000 theatres in the United States, only about 5,000 employ members of the IATSE.

He hoped to clear up the conflict resulting from the organization's having acquired jurisdiction over cashiers, doormen and ushers, who are affiliated with another national labor organization.

Mr. Browne declared that the very stability of the IATSE makes it a target for attacks by employers, which "calls for positive and judicious action." He paid a tribute to the outlawed NRA.

Cites Employer Attacks

The convention approved the action of the executive board in endorsing President Roosevelt for a second term, called for more vigorous activity in non-union situations, endorsed the appointment of a governmental coordinator for industrial cooperation, and a separate classification and uniform wage scale for industrial projection.

Fred J. Dempsey, secretary and treasurer, reported that income exceeded expenses by $24,000 in the last two-year period, and the membership now totals 5,600.

The convention heard William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, pledge his organization's support whenever needed and criticize the United States supreme court's decisions on minimum wage laws for women and child labor.

J. R. Sanderson, president of the Kansas City local opened the proceedings, and William Schulte, a delegate and member of Congress, delivered an address. RCA Photophone demonstrated new developments in reproducing equipment.

Laemmle Committee Meets To Discuss Dinner Plans

The committee on arrangements for the testimony dinner to Carl Laemmle met Monday at the Cinema Club in New York for a preliminary discussion of plans for the event, to be held June 22 at the Waldorf-Astoria, with proceeds going to the fund for the re-settlement of Jews in Palestine. Those present were:

Will H. Hays, Louis Nizer, Harry Hershfield, Eugene Zukor, Jack Alicoate, Harry D. Buckley, Gus Edwards, Dave Ferguson, Siegfried Hartman, Paul E. Milliken, Harold Rodner, Saul Rogers, Dennis F. O'Brien, Leo Spitz, Lionel Cohen, Louis Phillips, Gabriel L. Hess, Paul Benjamin and Major Henry Adam Procter, a member of the British House of Commons.

Two New MPPDA Members

Pickford-Lasky Productions and Selznick International Pictures were admitted to membership of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., at a meeting of the organization's board of directors in New York Wednesday. The resignation of Jesse L. Lasky, who represented his former company on the board, was accepted and John C. Flinn, general manager of Pickford-Lasky, was elected to fill the vacancy.

Reel Changeover Postponed

Because equipment manufacturers are unable to supply the new film shipping cases and reels in time, the changeover to 2,000-foot reels will be made on September 1 instead of August 1. Decision to postpone the changeover was reached Tuesday at a meeting of the distributors' committee in New York.

Fox Midwest Houses Open

Ninety-seven of the 128 theatres in the Fox Midwest circuit are now open, Elmer C. Rhoden, operating head for the National Theatres subsidiary, said this week before leaving New York for Kansas City. Mr. Rhoden had been in Manhattan for several days conferring with Spyros Skouras on product deals for next season.

Ira Furman to San Francisco

Ira Furman, Charlotte manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has been promoted to head the San Francisco branch of the company, succeeding Grover Parsons, who leaves the company June 20 to join Republic as western division manager.

Brandt Opens Coast Offices

Joseph Brandt, head of Nuovo Mondo Films, which is releasing 26 features this season, has returned to New York from the coast where he opened offices in San Francisco with Herbert Rosener and T. Tuoni in charge. Other offices have been established in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia.

Loew's Declares Dividend

The board of directors of Loew's, Inc., has declared a quarterly dividend of $1.62½ per share on the outstanding $6.50 cumulative preferred stock. The dividend is payable August 15 to stockholders of record at the close of business July 30.

News Cameramen Get Wage Boost

Wage increases are provided for newsreel cameramen in an agreement reached between Pat Casey, representing the film companies, and officials of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators.

The new contract provides for an increase in minimum scale for regular employees to $100 a week on a basis of 320 hours in an eight-week period, overtime to be paid for hours in excess of 320. The cameramen were given a pay boost amounting to 11 per cent, and a 40-hour week.

Freelance cameramen are to receive $35 a day, with overtime after eight hours. The contract has been sent to George E. Browne, IATSE president, for ratification.

Revelation, Powers To Work in Harmony

Revelation Pictures, Inc., which has been incorporated in Delaware to produce and distribute sponsored advertising films in association with British interests, will have a working agreement with Celebrity Productions, headed by P. A. Powers, it was stated by a representative of the latter this week.

Stanley S. Neal, managing director of Revelation Pictures of London, will be an officer of the American company and together the concerns will offer international circulation for sponsored films. Celebrity, which has already made two advertising pictures for the London company, will produce for the American one. Color and black and white cartoons will be supplied as well as short subjects.

Final Fox Met Hearing

Federal Judge Julian W. Mack has signed an order in the matter of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses, Inc., in reorganization proceedings in which he sets June 15 for a final hearing in the case, directing all creditors and stockholders to show cause why the trustees should not be discharged and the case closed. The order was signed on a petition of Milton C. Weisman, receiver of Fox Theatres Corporation, who asked for the final decree. Hearings will be held in the Federal Building in New York.

Youth Movement Seeks Disney

AUSTRIA WOULD LIKE AMERICANS TO ESTABLISH PRODUCTION IN VIENNA

Dr. Eugen Lanske, Who Controls Austrian Film Industry, Believes Musical Films Would Recapture Market for United States

Says MGM and Fox Have Promised Production in Vienna Next Season, but Distribution Circles Are Skeptical

Establishment of production and dubbing by American film companies in Vienna was the object of a mission concluded in the United States late last week by Dr. Eugen Lanske, head of the motion picture division of the Austrian department of commerce, who controls the destiny of the American industry in that country.

Prior to sailing on Saturday after several weeks' visit here which included an inspection of the Hollywood studios, Dr. Lanske said that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox had given their word to start production there for next season, and that both would make two pictures each. They would be in the Viennese musical spirit, he said.

He declared that while in Hollywood he learned of a resurgence of the tendency toward musical films. He believed that this type of production, in which dialogue can be held at a minimum, would regain for American distributors the market which he said they had lost abroad with the advent of talking pictures, and saw in such productions as Universal's "Showboat" typical efforts of the American industry to recapture that business through the international language of music.

With that as a preface, he explained that Vienna, with its great musical tradition, is pervaded with the musical mood more than any other production center in the world, and he believed it would, therefore, be advantageous for American companies to make four or five pictures a year in the locale of Franz Schubert, the Strausses and Franz Lehar.

"Musical films would overcome the barrier of language, since if such a picture is well done and simple, it would be sufficient to make it only in the English version, and it could be played throughout Central Europe with only subtitles in German," Dr. Lanske said.

Cites Vienna's Facilities

He believed that English language musicals could be produced in Vienna which would be popular in the United States and throughout the world, and that Vienna offers facilities such as the philharmonic orchestra and the state opera which might well be utilized in film production. He did not believe that a great many Hollywood stars, directors, technicians, and other necessary personnel would have to be transported to the Austrian capital to produce films that would prove acceptable here, and pointed out that while Austria has sent a large representation of motion picture talent to other countries, a sufficient number can still be found at home.

He declared the Austrian Government was prepared to cooperate with American companies who were willing to experiment in establishing production in Vienna, and believed that such efforts would enjoy greater success than has met American attempts at film-making in Paris, Berlin and Rome.

Two compatriots at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. Dr. Eugen Lanske, "the Will Hays of Austria," with Adolph Zukor (right), who 47 years ago came from Austria-Hungary to find fame and fortune in America. Eleanore Whitney, Paramount dancing starlet, welcomed the Austrian film head.

He said that Austria is interested in American film production as of the approximately 250 films shown in Austria in a year, 60 per cent are American, while 30 per cent are German and only 10 per cent are produced in Austria.

Urges Dubbing in Vienna

"As a country of artistic and cultural talents, Austria has many points of contact with the world of that cultural power, the film," Dr. Lanske declared. "This is especially the case today because of the international ascendancy of the musical film. On one hand this means an opportunity for increased showings of American product in Europe, and it also points the way for a wider field of activity for Austrian actors, singers, directors, but even more especially for Viennese music."

Dr. Lanske also expressed the wish of the Austrian Government to American film executives that those American films which are not exported into Germany be dubbed in German in Vienna.

"This would bring the idiomatic expressions much closer to the localisms of the South German area of distribution and would certainly mean good receipts," Dr. Lanske maintained. "I would like to emphasize, however, that my mission originated in the first place in the appreciation of the American film and particularly of American film production on the part of the Austrian minister of commerce, Frizt Stockinger."

Denies Any Political Mission

Dr. Lanske said he wanted it made clear that his mission was not prompted by any political motive against any other film producing country, "but was undertaken solely from an economic point of view."

In connection with this statement it is pertinent that when Dr. Lanske was in Hollywood there were reports that he sought a reciprocal agreement with the United States to replace the large representation now held in Austria by Germany. This, said Dr. Lanske, was untrue.

The Austro-German film agreement provides that Austria take 10 German films for each Austrian film imported into Germany. The balance of trade is maintained, however, because the revenue from Germany is greater, that country providing 80 per cent of the production cost of Austrian films imported into Germany.

"The same principle of balancing imports and exports could be applied to any other country," the emissary explained, adding that Austrian imports into the United States have been negligible. He denied that the Austro-German agreement has had any repercussions on the American film leadership in his country.

Meets Executives

When in Hollywood, Cecil B. DeMille informed him, he said, that biographical stories are in great demand, and that many historical films are being made, dating to the period immediately after the Civil War.

He talked with Adolph Zukor, Winfield Sheehan, David O. Selznick and Col. Jason Joy, public relations head at the Twentieth Century-Fox studio, and said he was delighted when photographed with Bing Crosby. He also discussed film matters with Joseph I. Breen, production code administrator.

Commercial and export phases were thoroughly discussed in two conferences the Austrian official had in New York with Major Frederick L. Herron, manager of the foreign department of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

One of the major problems in Austria is to increase theatre attendance, said Dr. Lanske, and to that end he is greatly interested in the possibilities of color films, which, he believed, would widen the appeal of motion pictures.

While he was informed in Hollywood that color production is from 30 to 40 per cent more costly than black and white, he believed that the potentially larger grosses would overcome any objection of Austrian exhibitors to paying more for this type of film.

Austrian exhibitors pay an average film rental of 28 per cent of the gross, but in exceptional instances, such as Chaplin's "Modern Times," the distributor's share would be 35 per cent, Dr. Lanske said.

Home office distribution circles in New York were skeptical that any American company planned to produce in Vienna, and for several reasons seriously doubted the practicability of such a move for the American market.

Production in Austria for the United States would entail the sending of American talent and technicians, and there is an insufficient supply of capable production personnel in Hollywood as it is, it was pointed out.

Furthermore, it was declared that dubbing in Vienna for German-speaking countries other than Germany itself, as Dr. Lanske proposed, would be too complicated as the German spoken in Vienna differs from that prevailing in other central European countries.

RCA SIGNS 20th CENTURY-FOX AND COLUMBIA; ERPI TO CUT STUDIO RATE

RCA Equipment Will Supplement Erpi Facilities Above Minimum of $100,000; Negotiation With Others Underway

RCA's Agreements Specify Generally Lower Royalty Fees Than Heretofore, With Running Time as Base

Marking the first penetration of RCA Photophone in the major production studios in Hollywood in several years, RCA Manufacturing Company made known this week that it had signed 10-year sound recording agreements with Twentieth Century-Fox and Columbia Pictures whereby they will utilize RCA "high fidelity" recording equipment and technique in the making of their films. These companies heretofore have been served exclusively by Electrical Research Products, Inc.

Meanwhile Erpi let it be known that it planned to reduce its rates to its licensees to meet those of RCA.

Wide departures from the terms of sound recording licensing agreements in effect since the advent of sound are provided in the contracts, which specify generally lower royalty fees than the film companies have ever paid before, according to RCA Photophone's announcement.

In neither case will the new equipment supplant Erpi installations now in use at the Twentieth Century-Fox and Columbia studios. Both companies have Erpi licenses effected in 1928 and running to 1944 and calling for a minimum royalty of $100,000 annually.

RCA Photophone said that it expected to obtain all the companies' recording business over and above the Erpi minimum. The company would not disclose whether its agreements called for any minimum similar to Erpi's.

Ten Year Contract

RCA Manufacturing Company on Monday issued the following statement relating to the contract with Twentieth Century-Fox:

"The contract, which is for a period of 10 years, will at once make available to Twentieth Century-Fox many new advances and developments in sound motion picture technique which the RCA laboratories have recently perfected. Under its terms, the movie company will effect substantial savings in both the cost of the sound equipment and in the distribution charges of its product. A number of the new recording systems are now en route to the Hollywood studios of Twentieth Century-Fox where detailed plans for its use are being worked out.

"The outstanding features of the RCA contract are that the Twentieth Century-Fox Film Corporation will pay lower royalty fees for sound recording than ever before; royalties vary according to the cost of the picture production. The fees will be based on actual entertainment running time in the theatre, rather than on an arbitrary charge per reel recorded. On a picture recorded in this country, a single fee covers its distribution throughout the world. No additional charge is made for recording trailers or for "dubbing" of sound in this country. Original foreign language versions made here will cost only 50 per cent of the domestic recording fee.

NEW LIGHT SYSTEM FOR "GARDEN OF ALLAH"

"The Garden of Allah," Selznick International color production, is the first full-length film recorded by the new ultra-violet light system recently developed by RCA engineers.

"The new system is said to achieve a fidelity of recording voice and music never before attained in a film," according to Selznick International. "It captures overtones of sound which have heretofore escaped the motion picture microphones."

"Other important phases of the RCA contract are that no charge will be made for the recording apparatus itself, and no charge for its installation and wiring; the equipment is furnished complete and ready for operation in the studios. Spare and renewal parts will be replaced without charge. Of particular importance to the licensee is that RCA Photophone will undertake to incorporate new improvements and developments in sound into existing equipment as they become available during the life of the contract."

RCA on Tuesday announced consummation of a similar license agreement with Columbia, and said that "most of the new sound recording equipment is already delivered in the Hollywood studios of the two new licensees or en route."

RCA is negotiating license agreements with other major producers. The use of its equipment heretofore has been confined to RKO, Republic, Walt Disney and Pathe News, which have employed RCA exclusively, and Van Beuren and several industrial film producers also are recording over the RCA system.

First Major Extension

The two agreements are the first major extension of RCA licensing and were made possible by negotiations concluded last winter by which Erpi liberalized its agreements to permit its licensees to use other than Erpi equipment on recording above the specified minimum.

Officials of Columbia and Twentieth Century-Fox said that the extent to which the Photophone equipment would be used at the studios could not be determined at this time as it would depend on production requirements from time to time, the availability of the equipment at the studios and other factors.

Columbia indicated that the initial uses would be limited to certain types of production, with more extensive use depending on the results achieved.

For Several New Stages

A spokesman for Twentieth Century-Fox said that the new equipment would be put in use on all of several new stages constructed recently and that RCA Photophone reproduction equipment would be installed in additional projection rooms being constructed at the coast studio.

"The choice was made only after adequate tests which showed that we might expect an even higher quality of sound from the new equipment than we have ever had before," the Twentieth Century-Fox official said. "The idea of competition does not enter into this. We just decided to give a trial to something we believe to be good, and we are convinced that Photophone's new type of recorders are good. They have several valuable improvements, such as 'push-pull' attachments and we are convinced that their use is highly practical," he said.

When RCA revised its recording charges last February 15, it marked the company's first major move since 1928 to become a principal factor in sound recording in Hollywood, where its activity had been limited by the fact that Erpi, a subsidiary of Western Electric and sub-subsidiary of American Telephone and Telegraph Company, at the very outset of audible films obtained the recording business of all large companies except RCA's affiliate, RKO.

RCA's new rates came at a time when Erpi had been making changes in contracts which were expected to amount to substantial reductions in recording costs for each major company licensee.

RCA's line of attack against Erpi's virtual control of the film recording business early last autumn took the form of a "private" investigation by its representatives of the Erpi contracts with the studios. They sought to determine if any restrictive clauses existed in Erpi licenses which barred or restrained competition in the licensing of recording equipment. Instead of extending this course of action, however, RCA revised its rates downward in its drive to obtain a share of the recording business.

Astor Will Produce Twelve in Next Two Years

Astor Productions, Inc., company just formed by Robert M. Savini, as president, and C. J. Tevlin, will produce 12 features for national release during the next two years, Mr. Savini said in New York this week. The schedule will be produced jointly with Morgan Pictures, Ltd., headed by George Bernard Morgan.

The first picture, which will start in Hollywood late this month, will be "The Deerslayer."

AMERICAN NEWSREELS EXEMPT FROM NEW DRASTIC FRENCH CENSORSHIP

Cartoons, Educational, Industrial, Commercial Films Also Exempted by a New Decree Which Has Minor Restrictions

Newsreels produced in France by American or other companies are exempt from the drastic censorship decree and export visa requirements, under a new decree, first copies of which were received in New York this week. They will, however, be subject to certain other conditions, which are considerably less important than the original set.

One of the last official regulations signed by former President Albert Sarraut before retiring from office, the new decree amends the one of May 7 which set up a commission for motion picture control under the ministry of education.

As explained in the June 6 HERALD, the original decree has been suspended, at least temporarily, and the American distributors operating in France are not suffering any handicaps as a result, according to Major F. L. Herron, foreign manager of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America.

The new regulations deal entirely with newsreels. In addition to exempting newsreels from the requirements of approval before shown domestically and the export visa, the decree of May 26 lifts the threat of banning newsreels in event the producer or distributor has had anything to do with the distribution or exhibition outside of French territory of films which may be regarded as contrary to the French national interest.

However, it still is provided that in exceptional cases the authorities may require that all or part of a newsreel be submitted for a visa under the regulations of May 7. Furthermore, the exemption holds only for 15 weeks after the newsreels' first public exhibition.

No dubbing of off-scene talk is permitted after a newsreel has been completed.

Also exempt are documentary films and animated cartoons produced for an official state department, educational, industrial and technical subjects made for private sponsors, as well as commercial films not exceeding three minutes in running time, provided they make no allusion to "contemporary personages or events."

Local police measures governing the taking or showing of newsreels are in no way affected by the decree.

Full text of the decree, in a translation made in Paris from the "Journal Officiel" of May 27, and as given out by Major Herron's office, follows:

Text of Decree

Art. 1. Newsreels published in France under their responsibility by companies having signed the declaration provided for in Article 5, below, which regularly appear at least once a week for purposes of information, and made up of motion picture strips exposed on the occasion of recent facts or developments are exempt from the ministerial visa provided for an Article 3 of the decree of May 7, 1936, under the heading of "Documentary News Films."

These newsreels may at all times include fragments of old films bearing directly on these facts and developments and drawn either from newsreels corresponding to the foregoing definition or from films regularly visaed or exempted from the visa by application of the provisions of Article 8 (paragraphs 1 and 2), below.

Art. 2. The post-sychronization of speeches and words spoken by personages on the scene in newsreels is forbidden. These speeches must be recorded at the same time the shots are made.

Art. 3. Films making up a newsreel may be preceded by titles giving some indication of the events shown or by spoken commentaries.

Newsreels must obligatorily carry, at the beginning of the projection, the name of the producing company and the address of its office. Each film must, furthermore, be preceded by some mention indicating the place and date of the events shown and the date of its first appearance in a public theatre.

15 Weeks Grace

Art. 4. The public projection of each of the films making up the newsreel is exempted from the ministerial visa only during a period of 15 weeks dating from its first appearance in a public theatre.

Art. 5. Any individual and any company regularly releasing motion picture newsreels is required to make a declaration 15 days in advance of the appearance in public of its first journal, to the Ministry of the Interior and to the Prefecture of the department in which it is domiciled or has its main office (to the Prefecture of Police, in Paris).

This declaration states:

The name, civil state, nationality and address of the publisher or, in the case of a company, its name, office address, its administrative management and the name, surname, nationality and domicile of its directors and administrators.

The title under which the newsreel is published.

The normal period of its appearance.

Any change in the statements contained in the original declaration must immediately be reported in the same form.

A period of one month, dating from the publication of this decree is granted to publishers within which to sign their declarations.

The declaration lapses if the publisher allows two months to pass without publishing the newsreel.

Art. 6. Before proceeding with the printing of newsreel positives, the manager of the newsreel shall send a detailed program of the scenes making up the newsreel (with indication, in case such are used, of old shots which are reproduced) and a list of the principal establishments in which the entire projection of the newsreel shall first occur, with the date and hour of this first projection, to the Ministry of the Interior and to the Prefecture of the Department in which the offices of the newsreel are located (to the Prefect of Police, in Paris).

The Minister of the Interior and the Prefect may demand that a print of one strip or the whole newsreel be forwarded to them; this print shall be returned within 24 hours.

Prefect May Decide

Art 7. The Prefect of the Department in which the newsreel offices are located—the Prefect of Police in Paris and in the subdivisions of the Department of the Seine—and, in all cases, the Minister of the Interior—may, exceptionally and at any moment, demand that all or part of the film be submitted for the visa of the Minister of National Education under the conditions established by the decree of May 7, 1936.

Art. 8. Also exempt from the ministerial visa are:

(1) Documentary films or animated cartoons produced on the initiative, for account of, and under control of a public department of the State, of a colony or of a protectorate;

(2) Educational films or animated cartoons, such as films for technical, commercial, industrial or agricultural instruction, hygienic instruction, etc., which shall have been classified in lists prepared by the competent ministerial departments;

(3) Commercial publicity films or animated cartoons the projection time for which does not exceed three minutes, and on condition that they make no allusion to contemporary personages or events.

Havas News Agency to Send Weekly French Newsreel Release to America

Agreements for American distribution of the first all-foreign newsreel were completed this week with French Gaumont, producing organization, by John S. Tapernoux, president of the French Motion Picture Corporation, in New York, who said that more than 150 American theatres which show foreign features already are dickering for the first release of the newsreel in late summer.

Deals for territorial sale of the newsreel, which will be produced in weekly editions for showing here three days after they are on view in Paris, are being conducted with Herbert Rosener, for the west coast; Wesley Greene, of International Film Bureau, covering Indiana, Wisconsin and Illinois; and Capital Film Exchange, routing eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey and Delaware. French Motion Picture Corporation will handle its own distribution in New York.

Contracts for the newsreel, which is sponsored by Havas News Agency, European equivalent of Associated Press, call for English titling of the pictures abroad and substitution of sound effects for excessive foreign talking. Showing of the pictures in the United States three days after the European "premiere" is made possible by a three-day delay for negative work abroad.

PARAMOUNT PROXY FIGHT ON HORIZON

Said to be Led by Director and Former Company Official; 2 Actions Against Company

Intimations of a proxy contest for the first annual meeting of stockholders of the reorganized Paramount Pictures, Inc., on June 16 with a rival slate of candidates for the five vacancies on the board were heard this week in company circles and along Wall Street. Five new directors are slated for election at the meeting and this undoubtedly has a bearing on the battle for the proxies. This week also saw two separate actions filed against Paramount in the New York supreme court, one involving the settlement of Electrical Research Product, Inc.'s, claim of $1,800,000 and the other directed at the theatre partnership operating agreements held with Karl Hoblitzelle and A. H. Blank.

The battle for the proxies is reported being led by an influential director of the company and a former Paramount official both of whom are said to be seeking the support of downtown banks and investment houses known to hold large blocks of Paramount securities. No public solicitations of proxies is being made by this faction. The company's own proxy committee, named by its board of directors last week, asks for proxies in a form attached to notices of the annual meeting which went out to all Paramount stockholders over the weekend.

Allied Owners Corporation, which has two representatives on the Paramount board in Stephen Callaghan and Harry O. King, is regarded as being in a strategic position in the event a rival proxy move attains proportions of any significance.

In a settlement of Allied Owners' claim against Paramount, 25,000 shares of the company's first preferred stock was issued to the Brooklyn realty company only recently. A share of first preferred stock is entitled to 20 votes, which gives Allied Owners 500,000 votes in next Tuesday's meeting, which might spell victory or defeat should any close proxy contest eventually develop. With several of the financial interests represented on the Paramount board having either reduced appreciably or disposed of their Paramount holdings entirely, a contest for proxies is viewed in some quarters as likely to be a spirited one.

Kennedy Report Delay

Meanwhile, expectations that Joseph P. Kennedy will complete his report on the company's status and submit it to a special meeting of the board some time this week appear to be confirmed. There were definite indications Monday that Mr. Kennedy's recommendations would be presented this Friday, in which case they may be received by the board as it will be constituted at the June 16 meeting. In addition to the election of five new directors by the stockholders, new resignations from the Paramount board are reported likely within the next week or 10 days. Among these is Mr. Callaghan, who came on the board as a representative of Allied Owners in his capacity as a trustee of that company, which is itself in reorganization. With the reorganization essentially completed, Mr. Callaghan will be discharged as an Allied trustee in the near future, which will end his status as an official representative of that company.

Four of the five new directors to be chosen will be elected for two-year terms expiring in 1938 and the fifth will be elected to fill the vacancy created by the recent resignation from the board of Henry R. Luce, who was serving a term expiring next year.

The action against the Erpi claim settlement was brought by Williams Yoost, who opposed the settlement when it was submitted to Federal Judge Alfred C. Coxe for approval in the U. S. district court in 1935. Mr. Yoost at that time was represented by Ralph Vatner, attorney, associated with Robert Robins of the Society for the Protection of the Motion Picture Theatre. They have been identified with litigation against Erpi for many years. The suit filed last week names as defendants in addition to Paramount and the company's board of directors, American Telephone and Telegraph, Western Electric, Erpi, S. A. Lynch, former adviser to the Paramount trustees on theatre reorganizations, and Southern Enterprises, a Paramount theatre subsidiary.

The second suit was brought by Lucille B. Sharmat, identified only as a Paramount stockholder. It is an action to compel Paramount Pictures, Inc., and the company's board of directors to exercise the options held by the company to repurchase the 50 per cent stock interests held by Hoblitzelle and Blank in the circuits operated by them under their Paramount contracts. Mr. Hoblitzelle's operations are principally in Texas while Mr. Blank's are in Iowa. Successive extensions of the options have been made in the past, the most recent bringing the expiration of the Hoblitzelle agreement to July 1, next, and the Blank agreement at the end of the year.

Marlen E. Pew Resigns His Post as Editor

The resignation of Marlen E. Pew as editor, vice-president and a member of the board of directors of Editor and Publisher, was announced last week. Ill health and a desire to devote more time to writing were given as the reasons for the step.

The announcement was made in a short editorial in last week's issue of the magazine. The editorship will be taken over by James Wright Brown, president of the company. Mr. Pew will continue his column, called "Shop Talk at Thirty."

Fight Midtown Theatre

Property owners in the vicinity of Madison Avenue and 62nd Street in New York, headed by Lawrence B. Elliman, are registering vigorous complaints against the plan of the Henry Phipps estate to obtain a permit for the erection of a theatre at that corner. Si Fabian, independent theatre operator, will operate the house if it is built.

French Taxation Delay Is Refused

The declarations provided for in the Franco-American double taxation convention will be filed by American film companies by June 30, Major F. L. Herron, foreign manager for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, announced this week in explaining that a requested three-months' extension will not be necessary.

For reasons of a legal nature, the French Government late last week informed the United States embassy at Paris that it could not extend the period in which American companies may file the declarations. The convention provides for a separation of French and foreign business, and levies an income tax only on domestic operations.

Major Herron said that when the explanation of the procedure of making the declarations was made known last April, it was found so complicated that additional time was deemed necessary. It later was determined, however, that the declarations could be made within the allotted period.

Cincinnati Council Elects

Mrs. Thomas Smith was elected president of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Council at the annual meeting last week. She succeeds Miss H. Dora Stecker. Others elected were: Mrs. Leona C. Frey, first vice-president; Mrs. Morris Strauss, second vice-president; Mrs. A. J. Collier, recording secretary; Mrs. Nicholas Lodwick, corresponding secretary; Miss Katherine Engel, financial secretary; Mrs. S. P. Kramer, auditor and Miss Emily Schwagmeyer, treasurer.

Ask Theatre Foreclosure

Requesting appointment of a receiver, action has been filed in the circuit court of Kenosha, Wis., by Chris Schroeder and Son Company and Alonzo H. Wilkinson, joint trustees, asking foreclosure on the Orpheum theatre building. The action is directed against the Kenosha Orpheum Theatre Company, the Midwest Theatres, Inc., Walter M. Burke and Joseph G. Rhode, alleging that $125,000 of an original $245,000 issue of real estate gold bonds on the premises was in default.

New Pittsburgh Houses

Three new theatres will be added to the total of Pittsburgh houses in the next few months. The 1,000-seat Morrowfield, being built by Mark Browar in the Squirrel Hill District, is to be ready by September 1. On Braddock Avenue an 800-seat Regent Square is under construction by F. H. McKnight for opening Labor Day and nearby Bernard Windt and Sam Deutch are building the Windt, to seat from 600 to 700.

Starr Gets Ventilators

Louis J. Starr of Plainfield, former film distributor, has taken over sole sales rights for air conditioning and ventilating systems of the Condenser, Service and Engineering Corporation of Hoboken. This company has previously specialized in ventilating systems for ships and oil companies. It is new in the theatre field.

PARAMOUNT TESTING SPANISH PRODUCTION

Spanish Artists Will Be Used in Experiment to Determine Policy on Castilian Product

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER

in Barcelona

Following the sailing for Genoa of John W. Hicks, Jr., foreign manager of Paramount Films, Roger C. Clement of the legal forces, and Fred W. Lange of the Paris office, M. J. Messeri, director general of the Paramount Spanish affiliate company, announced that arrangements at once would be started for production in Spain of one Paramount picture, with a cast of Spanish artists, as an experiment, to determine the Spanish company's policy as regards production in this country. Details as to location and the producing unit to be chosen, he added, would be announced following his return from a brief vacation.

When Messrs. Hicks, Lange and Clement arrived here they found all the hotels darkened by a strike affecting not only those establishments, but all restaurants, cafes, bars and even pensions.

With Mr. Messeri they motored out to Caldereta, in the environs of the city and beyond the strike area, where they dined before returning to a hotel deprived of elevator service—their apartments were on the fourth floor—and of bellboys, chambermaids, waiters, porters and even a concierge. However, they did not lack for dining accomodations, for they were the guests of both Mr. Messeri and his bride of a few months, at their residence, and of A. D. Comeaux, of the New York accounting staff of Paramount, who divides his time between the Paris and Barcelona offices.

The office force of Paramount Films, S.A.E. had prepared a handsome poster facing the entrance and reading: "Welcome to the Land of Sunshine and the Hundred Percenters!"

In the moment of their entry, however, one of the worst rainstorms of recent years in Barcelona was flooding the aristocratic Paseo de Gracia, so they contented themselves with the "Hundred Percenter" half of the official welcome.

Mr. Hicks expressed to the HERALD reporter his unbounded faith in the future of Spain as a film market. As to the recurrent rumors of Paramount production in Spain, he did not deny that the company planned that departure and said Mr. Messeri shortly would announce the company's position.

Commercial Treaty Near

While here, Messrs. Hicks, Lange and Clement—the latter, it is understood, devoting himself to questions of dubbing royalties—learned from a source close to the American Embassy at Madrid that the long protracted negotiations for the American-Spanish reciprocal commercial treaty actually were much nearer conclusion than had been believed by Americans in this country.

Indeed, one of the reasons ascribed by many dissatisfied Americans for the declination of Ambassador Claude G. Bowers and Commercial Attaché Nufer to accept the invitation of the American Chamber of Commerce in Spain to come to Barcelona for the observance here of "Foreign Trade Week" (in progress as this is written) was the distaste of both for questioning as to the treaty's status when, as was supposed, they would be unable to advance any grounds for hope on the subject. As a matter of fact, it was learned by Mr. Hicks and his associates, it is "the other way around." Both Embassy officials were fearful of being tempted to a premature disclosure of their knowledge of the satisfactory results that are imminent. The Paramount visitors were informed that the recent enactment of the Franco-American commercial treaty, which adjusted problems and difficulties much more intricate and delicate than the main obstacle to the pending American-Spanish instrument—the question of dollar exchange—is expected in diplomatic circles in Madrid and Washington to afford both a precedent and an example for the conclusion of the long-awaited concordat between the two capitals. The treaty, as now finally framed, is understood to remove automatically all obstacles to the remittance of the monies almost a year overdue the major film interests from their Spanish affiliate units.

Strike Fills Theatres

Film theatres throughout the city reaped a harvest during the strike which for three days, including Sunday, sealed up all the city's cafés, bars and eating-places. As the cafés are a regular Sabbath afternoon and evening rendezvous for the vast majority of Spanish and Catalan residents and families, the cinemas were filled to overflowing and today, the Ascension holiday, with offices, stores and factories closed at midday, likewise the film houses are crowded at the usual advanced price scale for días de fiesta.

Jobyna Howland Dies In Hollywood at 55

Jobyna Howland, 55, character actress of the stage and screen, died in Hollywood Monday from what doctors termed a heart attack. Among her film successes were "Cohens and Kellys in Trouble" and "Story of Temple Drake." She is survived by a brother, Olin Howland, a Warner contract player.

Barrymore Amends Case

John Barrymore has filed an amended complaint in his $30,000 suit against Warners in Los Angeles. The first complaint was ruled invalid on a technicality. The new action declares that six years ago the film company paid him $150,000 each for five pictures and promised 10 per cent of the profits. The actor contends that $30,000 in percentage profits is now due him.

DeMille Defends Soap Broadcast

"I think it is extremely good showmanship, or I wouldn't be doing it," said Cecil B. DeMille, in Chicago to attend the Paramount convention at the Edgewater Beach hotel, regarding the radio program which he directs for the Lux Radio Theatre every Monday night in Hollywood.

Mr. DeMille had just seen a copy of Motion Picture Herald with the layout regarding the Lux program and its possible influence upon theatre exhibitors.

"I am resentful if I am thought to be destructive to the industry," said the director. "I owe a great deal to the motion picture industry and when I agreed to appear on the Lux Radio Programs, I had it stipulated in the contract that I could talk about forthcoming pictures in the programs. I felt that going on the air on this program would be a means of creating many more friends for motion pictures and the information I would be able to give the millions of listeners about the screen would be of benefit to it. In my initial program, I introduced stars of various studios. I told about the pictures in which they would soon appear. During the program, I mentioned the product of five major companies and I referred to it in a complimentary and interesting manner."

Mr. DeMille went on to say that Monday was an "off night" in most theatres. By bringing to millions of radio listeners interesting news about Hollywood, he felt he would be helping create a larger motion picture audience, as the advertising motion pictures would get over the radio would be more valuable than the amount of revenue lost by patrons staying away from the theatre to hear the radio show—"if any patrons stay away."

"If the Lux Program doesn't make the radio listener go to see the stars he has heard over the air, the next time their pictures are shown in his community, then advertising doesn't pay—and we know that good advertising is an absolute necessity in selling motion pictures."

Mr. DeMille emphasized that previous to signing for the radio broadcasts he had carefully and seriously considered the effect upon the public and he felt that the millions of persons he could reach, over the air, with interesting things about Hollywood, over a period of time, would result in forthcoming pictures having a greater and wider box office appeal than ever before.

SCREEN SIZE LIMITS USES OF TELEVISION

Maximum Picture Size is Twelve Inches; Newsfilm Tieup Seen as Chief Link with Industry

by BRUCE ALLAN

in London

Expectations that British cinemas might regularly feature television during the current year, if they were ever seriously entertained, will not survive the more definite information of the plans of the British Broadcasting Corporation now available.

The BBC will begin television service in early or mid-July, but the prospect of "television theatres," inside or outside broadcasting house, seems to be disposed of conclusively by the statement officially made to me this week that the maximum size of the picture it is possible to transmit with clear definition is 6 inches. By means of a special magnifying screen, this direct-reception maximum can be increased to 12 inches, but that is as far as progress has gone.

With the important premise, above implied, that for the moment the television service will appeal solely to the private citizen and not to the exhibitor, the program of development laid down by the BBC is of great interest and importance. Definitely it promises to make Television a permanent feature of the British citizen's home life in 1936. Though it is not possible to name the day when it may also be a feature of theatre programs, picture size is the only obstacle in the way of immediate experiments in that direction.

The immediate policy of the BBC is to regard its transmissions as officially experimental until the end of September. During October it will transmit entertainment programs, but this period will also be regarded as partly experimental. "Dress rehearsal month" is the BBC phrase to describe October.

In November "listeners" will be offered a regular television service. It will be strictly limited at first as regards both time and the number of subscribers to whom it will be available. There will be three daily sessions: from 3 p. m. to 4 p. m.; from 6.15 to 7.15 and from 9 p. m. to 10.30 p. m. The program will be made up broadly on the basis of half an hour's variety or cabaret items, 10 minutes of news films, and the balance of the time will be devoted to special items, largely in the nature of illustrated talks or "interest" items.

This program will be transmitted from the BBC Television station at Alexandra Palace in North London, the effective range of which is expected to be 30 miles. This in effect limits the first television service to the Greater London area, though in fact signals are expected to reach Brighton and other towns.

Later extension of the service to provincial

Changes Are Discussed In Film Storage Rules

Revision of the rules and fees for storing film at the New York exchanges were discussed last Thursday at a special meeting in the Municipal Building between the exchange maintenance heads and fire officials.

Under a classification of fees proposed by the fire department for the storage of film a fee of $10 will be required for 2,000 to 10,000 feet; $25 for 10,000 to 30,000; $50 for 30,000 to 100,000; $75 for 100,000 to 150,000; $100 for 150,000 feet and more.

Also sought is a special levy of $25 for projection rooms, $25 for the room for cleaning films, $100 for studios where printing and developing is done, the combination of all not to exceed $100.

For each vehicle collecting or delivering junk film, a $10 fee will be imposed. Trucking companies must put signs on their vehicles stating "Inflammable" and "Keep Away from Fire."

Theatres will not be affected by any new rules and levies.

Greek Houses Total 153; 135 Are Wired

A total of 153 film theatres were in actual operation in Greece at the end of March, according to a report to the Department of Commerce. Of the total, 135 are wired for sound. All are indoor houses which usually operate from October through May. During the summer months a number of outdoor theatres are opened. The lack of air-conditioning equipment or adequate ventilating apparatus makes operation impossible during the summer, the report states.

Brazil Censor Approvals

Of the 184 films submitted to the censorship board in Brazil during the month of March, 171 were approved without qualification, five were listed as improper for children, one improper for minors, and one was rejected. Six were noted as educational material. The figures were incorporated in a report to the Department of Commerce from Trade Commissioner J. Windsor Ives.

Fight Over Title Of "Ecstasy" Goes Into a New Round

An injunction restraining the use of the word "Ecstasy" in the title of the film known as "Ecstasy of Young Love" was granted late last week by the appellate division of the New York supreme court to Eureka Productions, Inc., in a suit against Metropolis Pictures Corporation.

The court thus overruled a decision of Judge William T. Collins in supreme court last March denying a temporary injunction on the ground the title "Ecstasy" had not actually been in use and that the publicity the plaintiff's picture had received did not entitle it to protect the name.

Metropolis and New York theatre operators were alleged to have advertised "Ecstasy of Young Love" with the first word in heavy type to take advantage of the publicity the plaintiff's film had received through action of the Government to keep it out of the country. Eureka claimed this was unfair competition.

A hearing to make the injunction permanent will be held in the fall. The case will set a precedent in that it involves the use of a title which was not as yet in circulation and to which the defendants claimed the plaintiffs therefore had no right, according to Henry Pearlman, 99 Wall street, Eureka's attorney.

Meanwhile, Federal Judge John C. Knox in New York denied a motion for a judgment on the pleadings in the suit brought by Eureka against Raymond Mulligan, United States marshal. The plaintiff sought damages of $5,000 for the alleged seizure and destruction of a print of "Ecstasy" in August, 1935. The marshal at that time explained the print was burned shortly before a court order staying the destruction had reached him, after the Czechoslovakian picture had been declared unfit for import.

Franklin Wants Action On Hawaiian Inquiry

Charles Franklin, New York attorney, on Tuesday wired Attorney General Homer S. Cummings to take action on an investigation which he said the Department of Justice has been conducting for 20 months into the product situation in Hawaii.

Mr. Franklin informed the attorney general of reports that complaints by independent theatres on the islands had been given scant notice as a result of alleged influence exercised by the Consolidated Amusement Company, dominant operator in Hawaii.

Mr. Franklin charged that Consolidated is overbuying from the major companies for the purpose of forcing out of business houses controlled by Franklin Theatrical Enterprises.

cities is planned. Perfected, I was officially told, is a co-axial cable which will carry the signals several hundreds of miles. This will enable the development of a chain of relay stations, each serving approximately a thirty-mile area. The first city to be linked up in this way is likely to be Birmingham, 120 miles from London and the center of a densely populated industrial area.

Transmission of the programs will be by three methods, variants evolved by the specialists of the Baird and EMI systems, officially adopted by the BBC.

Two of these are direct transmission methods, the Baird "spotlight scanning" and the EMI "electric eye." The former is an improved system on the principle of the original 30-line method, but enormously speeded up and employing an intense spotlight for scanning purposes. An outstanding feature of "the electric eye," on the other hand, is that it calls for less light—only one-sixth of that needed for ordinary photography, it is claimed.

Film Is Used

Alternative is the Baird "telecine" method. This uses an intermediate film. A studio performance is filmed and the development speeded up; the film is actually scanned for television transmission while still wet, and the time-lag between performances and receipt of signals at the receiver is only 40 seconds.

The "telecine" method will be largely used for transmitting studio items, particularly those calling for costume or stage effects. The other methods will be available for direct talks and for out-of-studio transmissions. Films will occasionally be used in connection with "electric eye" transmissions, but in this case it will be direct transmission of a screened picture and not by scanning of the film itself.

Among novelties of presentation planned by the BBC is a combination of direct and "second hand" transmission of a speaker. Introducing an illustrated talk, the lecturer will be seen and heard in person, directly transmitted. As the picture fades into the illustrations to the talk, the comment will come from a previously recorded film. To conclude the talk, the speaker will again be seen and heard by direct transmission.

Apparatus Will Be Standard

There is some uncertainty as to the exact date at which receivers will be available to the public. Definitely established is that there will be a standard form of apparatus, capable of receiving either Baird or EMI signals; due to the difference between these systems, the receiver will be on a dual basis with a switch to put the Baird or EMI circuits into action as required. As at present planned, there will be a fortnightly change in the transmission system used by the BBC; two weeks of programs by Baird transmission will be followed by two weeks per EMI.

While EMI are declared to have a receiver ready for the market, there is little likelihood that it will be generally available in July. Baird, according to latest official statements, are awaiting the results of the test transmissions before considering marketing. A common expectation is that there may be a display, and probably demonstrations, of receivers at Radiolympia, the annual exhibition of the Radio Manufacturers' Association, in August. Important to remember is that the BBC has no interest or control in the supply of receivers and that, a standardized form of receiver once arrived at, it will be open to any radio manufacturer to produce his own model, with due royalties paid to Baird and EMI.

Because the BBC has decided to make certain news films of its own, to cope with the situation that it has been refused the immediate use of the regular newsreels, there have been stories that various theatre interests were seeking to tie up exclusive rights to reproduce the BBC news service as a television theatre service.

Stories Are Contradictory

Theatre reproduction of television being, for reasons already stated, outside the range of practicability, these stories carried their own contradiction. Their basis was, however, a very definite and important contact between the BBC and cinema interests.

Offers have been made to the former, from several sources, for the right of exclusive theatre reproduction of BBC newsfilms. At the date of writing it seems likely that an agreement on this basis may be made with Jack Davis, controlling the Monseigneur News theatre in Piccadilly Circus.

Mr. Davis, with plans definitely shaped for the acquisition of further news theatres in London (Leicester Square, Marble Arch, Trafalgar Square among other sites) and in Manchester, Sheffield and other provincial cities, is concurrently discussing a deal with Percy Furber of Translux, who is associated with Will Evans, late circuit chief of Gaumont-British, and with Lord Beaverbrook, in a British Translux company at present in the nucleus stage.

The possibility is a very big news theatre company, with a BBC news film tie which might develop into a television tie if and when television is developed to the theatre screen stage.

At the moment, the BBBC can offer the news theatres just news films, which may or may not prove to be competitive to the highly organized and efficient service of the established newsreel companies.

Exhibitors Welcome Harley

An exceptionally representative gathering of British theatre executives, at a Savoy luncheon following a Curzon Cinema preview of "Under Two Flags," welcomed Francis L. Harley, successor of W. J. Hutchinson as managing director of Fox Films, Ltd.

Theo. H. Fligelstone, president of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, was at the top table, with John Maxwell of Associated British Pictures, A. W. Jarratt, booking chief of Gaumont-British, Ralph Bromhead of County Cinemas, Jack Davis, J. R. Poole, Phil and Syd Hyams, D. J. James, Ken Nyman, Southan Morris and many members of the CEA general council.

Tributes to the reputation built by W. J. Hutchinson during his stay in London were a feature of Mr. Fligelstone's speech in responding to the toast to the CEA by Mr. Harley, and the other outstanding note of the oratory was Robert T. Kane's declaration that 20th Century-Fox was through with production of socalled quota pictures.

NEW TAX LEVIES AND CENSORSHIP RESTRICTIONS IMPEND IN POLAND

Additional Levy Would Produce Fund to Finance Manufacture of Pictures Locally; Burden Heavy on U. S. Films

by JOSEPH FRYD

in Warsaw

News of additional regulations imminently or indefinitely impending has shaken motion picture industry circles here, especially importers of American films and branches of American companies established in this country. Imposition of increased tax levies and extreme censorship restrictions that would automatically eliminate many of the year's outstanding productions combine to make the outlook gloomy.

The threatened increase in taxes would be in addition to duties and sundry fees already charged, necessitating payment of one zloty (approximately 21 cents) on every foot of negative, with positive prints excluded.

In discussing the prospect J. Handt, chief of the Motion Picture Board which represents exhibitors and distributors, local and foreign, said, "There already exists a project to levy upon films imported into Poland an additional tax on every metre of negative. Although this was submitted two years ago, it has not been enacted. It is being considered at present by the Ministry of Commerce and Industry, also by the Ministry of the Interior, to which is attached the Central Film Bureau.

Rate Not Definite

"It is not known, though, when this new ruling may go into effect, or what is its actual reading, because within the past few years without doubt there must have been instituted some changes. It is probable that because of intervention in the matter by parties to be affected by this new ruling, a lowering of the tax will be made, perhaps from one zloty to 70 groszy (approximately 15 cents).

"According to the new project, all revenues derived thereby will be turned over to a pool called a Film Fund. The purpose of this fund will be to develop and promote local production of films. It is supposed that revenue would accrue to the amount of about 700,000 zloty or approximately $150,000."

Foremost among those affected by such a levy will be American producers. MGM alone will have sliced from its turnover from 70,000 to 80,000 zlotys.

The Film Fund will be devoted to the development and promotion of the Polish film industry, but precisely how is not yet known. Whether it will subsidize, or produce under the guidance of the government, no one knows. There is talk now of producing a picture dealing with the life of Marshal Pilsudski, the action of which would take place in Siberia, Japan and Poland.

HAILE SELASSIE OFFERED $5,000 A WEEK ON STAGE

A London theatrical agent has offered Haile Selassie, Emperor of Ethiopia, now on his way to London, $5,000 a week to appear in the Albert Hall and theatres all over England, according to a copyright dispatch to the New York Herald-Tribune. Roy Stromberg, of London Provincial Productions, says he believes the Emperor will accept his offer.

"We want him to talk of his hardships, his reasons for leaving Addis Ababa and abandoning the war, and the hardships of his people through gas. We do not intend the script of his speech to contain an attack on the Italians that might cause Foreign Office complications," Mr. Stromberg said.

The emperor, however, has made no comment on the offer.

At present the most interesting phase of the matter is the reaction of the American producers and distributors. If they would resort to a boycott it is believed this would only bring about the closing of nearly all the picture houses in Poland. American companies supply 80 percent of the pictures exhibited. Polish production at present amounts to about 15 or 20 pictures yearly and they are intended solely for the masses. Not possessing high quality, they are not patronized by the educated classes and so cannot be recognized as dangerous competitors for American films of high artistic calibre.

Capital Is Needed

Above all, there is a paucity of capital which puts the local industry at a disadvantage, causing a lack of technical and directorial talent, of lavish sets and so limiting everything to the barest necessity. Although moneyed immigrants from Germany have indicated willingness to invest capital, only during the past three years was there any chance of producing a talking picture, dating from the time when the only studio in Warsaw was equipped with a Tobis Klang Film apparatus. Previously the synchronizing method was used, employing gramophone records.

The 20 films locally produced hardly suffice for two theatres as a repertoire. The remaining first-run houses draw from the American production sources, and infrequently from the French, while one theatre, the Philharmonia, shows German films.

It is possible that the American distributors will accept the new regulation, should it go into effect, but their decision will probably be guided by the rate of the levy. What will actually happen remains to be seen.

Censorship Rules Arising from Local Disorders Would Debar Many Outstanding Pictures of Year from Poland

Exact nature of the new censorship restrictions was made clear to representatives of the industry summoned to the Film Bureau at the Ministry of the Interior and informed that the censor in future will bar films showing revolutionary activities, spy operations, military uniforms, theft, crime of all kinds, and pictures dealing with the period when Poland was under Russian rule. Such films as "Mutiny On the Bounty" and "Captain Blood" would come under the ban, which applies likewise to locally made product. The ruling is understood to be temporary in character and to have arisen from apprehension regarding recent events in Cracow and Czestochows where rioting was suppressed by police.

Tax Schedules by Category

Spring is a season of zealous reform and governmental house-cleaning. It has begun with a change in the amusement tax. Until now films of a high artistic level have received special benefits in the way of a tax rebate amounting to 10 percent. This has been done away with entirely and an equal tax for all enacted. It comprises, three catagories, which are as follows: In Warsaw 37.5 percent of the total box-office returns; in cities of the second category—25.9%; in the third category—13%, the smallest being 9.1%.

From the above there will be a reduction solely for houses showing Polish made supplements. It will amount to 20 percent of the tax levied on the exhibited film. These houses will benefit exclusively by this arrangement and the American distributors will lose.

Public Fights Tax After Theatres Close

Petitions said to carry more than 8,000 signatures of individuals and business firms have been presented to the City Councilmen of Pensacola, Fla., in an effort to bring about the repeal of the recently adopted amusement levy which resulted in the closing of the Saenger and Isis on May 6. The houses are still dark.

The current protest of the general public against the tax follows closely similar resolutions passed by the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local 1194, and the Central Labor Union. All protests thus far have been futile, Mayor H. Clay Armstrong, declaring that the tax argument appeared to be a "closed incident."

Liberty Circuit Expanding

Liberty Amusement Company, West Virginia, Ohio and Pennsylvania theatre operators, is expanding with two additional houses in western Pennsylvania. C. J. Vogel, circuit president, announces that one of them will be built in Aliquippa, Pa., with the site of the other to be announced soon.

REPORTED HOYTS-AMALGAMATED MERGER PLAN DRAWS NEW FIRE

Repercussions in Australia Extend to 20th Century-Fox and Chase Bank; New Zealand Premier Attacks "Combinations"

by CLIFF HOLT
in Sydney

Every motion picture company interested in the Australian and New Zealand markets will be affected if the reported negotiations for a fusion between Hoyts Theatres, Ltd., of Australia, and Amalgamated Theatres, Ltd., of New Zealand, reach a successful conclusion.

In association with General Theatres Corporation, Hoyts controls the majority of the leading city theatres in Australia, and approximately 60 suburban or neighborhood theatres. In New Zealand, Amalgamated's circuit embraces 65 theatres. The report that conversations had taken place with a definite though as yet undefined amalgamation in view caused a sensation in film circles in the two Dominions and had political repercussions that even involved Twentieth Century-Fox and the Chase Bank of America.

It is clear that such a fusion would have a most important bearing on the film-buying situation in the two Dominions, and it would be equally apparent to all distributors that no film would earn anything like its maximum rentals on these markets unless sold to the Hoyts-Amalgamated group.

When the news first became known that there was "something doing" between Hoyts and Amalgamated, the Exhibitors' Association of New Zealand took a deputation to the Dominion Prime Minister, the Honorable J. M. Savage, with a declaration that because of the interest of the Chase Bank of America in Hoyts, there was a danger that foreign capital would gain control of local theatres. Mr. Savage replied to the deputation with a vigorous attack on "combinations", and said, "We are going to run New Zealand, and we don't want it run from either New York or Australia. We cannot afford to allow picture combinations or any other sort of combination to come to New Zealand for the purpose of controlling any service that New Zealand requires. We are not going to have it. This thing has been in an unsatisfactory position for some years, and the time has come when the Government will take a hand. No outside interests will govern us. That is definite."

Although they assured him that there was no suggestion of a "combination" being set up, the expression of the Government's policy by the Prime Minister no doubt prompted those most actively interested in the Hoyts-Amalgamated deal to mark time; but meanwhile independents and the three large Dominion circuits who are all out of sympathy with the independents on the question, have been indulging in some bickering among themselves. Representatives of the circuits now condemn the independents for "running to the Government with this and that complaint," and accuse them of inviting the Government to take over the operation of theatres itself. Mr. Savage also is strongly criticized for accepting the views of the deputation without first hearing the other side of the argument and investigating the matter more fully.

'MRS. BRADFORD' PICKED FOR QUEEN MARY SHOW

"The Ex-Mrs. Bradford," starring William Powell and Jean Arthur, was selected by officials of the Cunard Line as the first American picture to be shown for entertainment of passengers on the Queen Mary, Britain's new ruler of the seas, on her maiden voyage to this country.

The ship has two main projection rooms on board. One in the regular theatre, complete with all the latest equipment for the projection of sound pictures, and the other in the children's playroom, where suitable subjects are screened.

Future of General Theatres

Meanwhile, speculation is rife as to the future of General Theatres Corporation, the operating company formed when the E. S. & A. Bank brought an end to the theatre-building war between Hoyts and its then keenest competitor, Union Theatres, and which today functions as the managing company for Hoyts' and Union's city interests on a 50-50 profit-and-loss sharing basis. On the one hand is the story that before very long either one of the companies will exercise its prerogative and give a twelve months' notice for a return to open competition; on the other, there's the growing conviction in some quarters that the names of Union and Hoyts will disappear into General Theatres Corporation, conducted as a vast amusement organization, with all the Hoyts and Union resources thrown into it.

At the moment, such a proposal appears fantastic, and more likely is the possibility of some liaison between Hoyts and Amalgamated, which, in the event of a split between Hoyts and Union, would be of tremendous value to both companies, because with more than 100 theatres under their wing, they would still be able to wield the same film-buying power that Hoyts and Union now exert through G.T.C. Still, in the event of a Hoyts-Union split, it is conceivable that Union, not to be outdone, would look around for some affiliation in order to remain on the same strong footing as Hoyts, and the most likely quarter at the moment seems the wealthy British interests under C. M. Woolf.

Stuart F. Doyle, managing director of Union and now in London, is already in active association with Mr. Woolf through Associated Distributors, and especially if Mr. Woolf's overtures for the Twentieth Century-Fox holding in Gaumont British are successful, Mr. Woolf undoubtedly would be anxious to come to terms with a man who could give him such valuable Australian releasing channels, and who publicly has stated his desire of increasing the number of British theatres now existing in the Commonwealth. How Hoyts would view such a move is open to conjecture, but the fact remains that Fox holds a controlling interest of 51 per cent in Hoyts, and any international move likely to interfere with the very satisfactory position that Fox holds on the Australian market would be strenuously opposed.

There is one contingency, however, that still has to arise, and that is the collapse of General Theatres Corporation. So far it's all rumor, but a significant feature is the anxiety of both the Union and Hoyts circuits (although ostensibly one company so far as city holdings are concerned) to retain and improve independent of each other their relationships with distributors, apparently, it would seem, should an emergency arise.

Victorian Exhibitors Invoke 25 Per Cent Rejection Clause to Consternation of Distributors; Quota Starts in December

Rejection Clause a Problem

Embodied in the Victorian Quota Bill, the 25 per cent Rejection Clause, which is in force already, although the quota itself will not come into operation before December, has been causing a mild panic in the Victorian offices of the distributing companies. Exhibitors are making full use of the privilege and are canceling any picture for which a stiff price has been asked unless it proves a conspicuous success in the city.

This has had the effect of making the distributors more anxious than ever about the first release seasons, and as a result there is a tendency on their part to contribute towards the advertising costs of the city season in order to leave nothing to chance.

The Victorian rejection privileges, and the N.S.W. and Victorian Quota Laws, which, besides compelling exhibitors to exhibit a stipulated number of Australian Films, also require distributors to release an even greater number, has not made distribution in this country any easier.

PETTIJOHN PROPOSES TAX SOLUTION

Suggests Sales Tax to Supplant All Others

To the Editor of the Herald:

One of these days some halfwit is going to sit down and lay out a sensible tax program for this country. Let's hope it is done before it is too late.

The Government has and is now considering additional, complicated, duplicating and overlapping tax measures which require an army of employees to administer.

Every state in the Union, without exception, has a confused tax situation and even down to the counties, towns and municipalities there is overlapping and confusion as to "kick backs" and apportionments, etc.

It is my belief that of the sum total of taxes collected in the United States for government, state, county, township, municipal and school, water assessments, sewer assessments, etc., it costs approximately one-third of all the money so collected to administer these unintelligent, confusing and complicated systems. That means a waste of billions of dollars in taxpayers' money.

Any system which would do away with that waste would be opposed by countless armies of tax collectors, assessors, board members, reviewers, inspectors and experts.

But here is the solution. Let the federal government and every one of the 48 states repeal every federal and state income tax. Let every state repeal every present existing sales tax—in fact, repeal every form of taxation in nation, state and county, except school taxes, which must be kept out of politics and regulated from time to time.

Then establish in lieu of all these expensive to collect and administer taxes, one tax only as follows: Begin with a 10 per cent sales tax to be collected on the sale of every article of 10 cents or more, of every kind and description whatsoever, whether it be milk, medicine, or anything else.

Let all of this money be paid into the federal government, into one fund. Then let the federal government apportion back to each of the 48 states 5 per cent, or one-half of the 10 per cent of the money so received from each state for the expenses of the states and counties, the state apportioning in turn to the counties.

That 10 per cent sales tax would in a very few years pay off every existing state and national debt. It can then be reduced to 6 per cent or 4 per cent, apportioning to the states 3 per cent and 2 per cent. And after all outstanding indebtedness has been paid the tax can be reduced to 2 per cent and the federal, state and county governments can be run very efficiently on a tax as low as 1 per cent or 2 per cent at the most.

Now if that statement I have made above is true, why in the name of Heaven would anybody oppose it? It would solve the tax problem not only for our industry but for every form of business in America.

The only argument against this tax is that it would raise the price of all commodities 10 per cent. The answer to that argument is that because of the bonded indebtedness today in our nation, counties and municipalities, every commodity in the country is selling at from 10 per cent to 50 per cent more than would be charged if the government, states and counties were all out of debt. No one will deny that prices are more than 10 per cent higher than they were before and after the war.

You and I can remember when eggs sold for 12 to 15 cents a dozen; butter for around 15 cents a pound. You could get a big loaf of bread for 5 cents and a darn good loin steak, big enough to feed a family of four, from 20 cents to 22 cents. It is taxes, brother, that makes the high cost of living, plus "old man interest" on bonded indebtedness, and believe me everybody pays whether they know it or not. If every luxury tax, corporation tax, and other forms of funny taxes were done away with, all your prices would come down.—C. C. Pettijohn, Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., New York.

Films Used in $4,000,000 Family Welfare Drive

The production and use of films in philanthropic campaigns was the topic of "a clinic on the motion picture" at the last meeting of the New York Social Work Publicity Council at the Town Hall Club last week.

"Not in the News," a film addressed to the public on the current $4,000,000 drive sponsored by the Citizens Family Welfare Committee, was shown as an illustration.

The Council consists of the public relations heads and others active in the many social welfare groups in the city.

Pietro Cinelli Dies

Pietro Cinelli, 68, died in New York Monday. Mr. Cinelli was born in Italy and came to this country 38 years ago, acquiring real estate holdings and ownership of two motion picture theatres. The first of the theatres was started about 20 years ago as a nickelodeon in the Bronx.

Melniker Heads Foreign Theatres

William Melniker, for the past 10 years in charge of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer activities in South America, has been named by Arthur M. Loew as head of all foreign theatre activities of the company. Mr. Melniker's headquarters will be in New York.

Succeeding Mr. Melniker in South America is Stewart Dunlap, who has been head of the China office. Mr. Dunlap is now en route to New York for conferences with Mr. Loew. Morey Marcus, manager of the Dutch East Indies branch, has been moved to take over the China dutites, but no successor has been named as yet for his former position.

Under his new duties, Mr. Melniker will supervise the operations of 22 theatres either owned or operated by MGM. The theatres are the Cremore and Metro in Brisbane; Metro, Melbourne and St. James, Sydney, all in Australia; Cameo and Queens Hall, Brussels; Majestic, Ghent, and Forum, Liege, Belgium; Metro, Rio de Janeiro; Metro, Santiago, Chile; Empire, London; Olympia, Paris; Scala, Budapest; Metro, Calcutta, India; Metro, Tikio; Metro, Lima, Peru; Ideal, Manila, P. I.; Metro, Johannesburg; Metro, Capetown; Metro, Durban, South Africa; Capitol, Madrid; Metro, Montevideo, Uruguay.

Missouri Sales Taxes

Missourians paid $961,326 in sales taxes in April, it has been revealed in Kansas City. This is the largest month for collections since last December, when the total went over a million dollars. March receipts were $877,538.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Greensburg, Kansas

Dear Herald:

This town is located in the wheat section of Kansas, that is, it is located on the west edge of the wheat section and on the east edge of what is known as the "Dust Bowl" and this imaginary dust bowl is the southwest corner of Kansas, western Oklahoma, eastern Colorado and southwest Nebraska and it was from this section that Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania and New York got their conception of the "Wild and Wooly West "when the wind was from this quarter.

They have just had a lot of rain out here lately. We can swear to that, for yesterday April Shower got stalled twice in water so deep on the highway that it flooded the engine and she stopped dead in the middle of the pond, and there we were with not a fish pole in sight.

This rain has given western Kansas a splendid prospect for the first wheat crop she has had in four years and the wheat gamblers in the wheat pit in Chicago would do well to watch their step, and from the looks of things, we would judge that wheat harvest will commence here in about ten days, and all those who have been claiming to want a job ought to find it here in Kansas, for it's wheat, wheat everywhere and not a "reliefer" in sight.

Whether you know it or not, Kansas has been the home of some very prominent people. We came through Hayes yesterday and Hayes is the town where "Wild Bill" started practicing with his six shooter on cow boys and others who wanted to run the town. When he put the town on a sensible and paying basis he moved to Dodge City. We have seen his grave (along with "Calamity Jane") on White Rocks at Deadwood, South Dakota.

Ben Turpin and other prominent picture stars are Kansas products. Ex-congressman "Sockless" Jerry Simpson and Carrie Nation were from Medicine Lodge and Mary Ellen Lease was from somewhere in Kansas. Senator Borah of Idaho used to practice law in Kinsley. Timken, the man who patented the Timken Bearing, used to be a mechanic at a little town named Timken in his honor. Chrysler, the man at the head of the Chrysler automobile works (and we are driving one) was a boy mechanic in a Kansas town. Al Jennings used to ride bronchos and get money in devious ways that were not considered overly honest, when he was a young sprout here in Kansas. We believe that Marion Talley owns land and milks heifers in northern Kansas, but maybe it isn't Marion, anyhow it is some prominent singer. The late vice-president Charlie Curtis was a Topeka citizen and Topeka has another very prominent citizen who may become president, who knows?

Then besides those there is Charlie Spainhour here in Greensburg who operates the theatre here, don't forget him. We drove down here about 150 miles mostly to visit Charley, and, Greensburg being a pretty good town we are going to spend Sunday here. But referring to some of the prominent citizens of Kansas has taken us away from the wheat question, and Kansas you know, is the wheat state of the Union and Kansas furnishes the big part of the bread of this nation.

Last Monday we drove from home down to Omaha and stayed there for two days waiting for Denny to send us a list of the Missouri boys but it didn't come, so we came down here, and we haven't received it yet, when we do we are going over there. We met a lot of the Omaha exhibitors and exchange men but we have already told you about them a number of times so we will skip those, but we did meet Regina Molseed, Sec'y of the Film Board, and Ethel B. Good, Sec'y for Everet Cummings of the Trustate Theatre Corp. and her married sister, who was chaperoning the two girls who were out looking the town over in a very fine car. Regina also works in the Scott-Ballantyne Theatre Equipment office and she has associated with Bob Ballantyne and Gus Harms so long that she don't need to be chaperoned, she can chaperone herself.

We had a very delightful visit with H. S. Moulton who operates the theatre at Sebetha, Kansas. H. S. is an ex-banker but he quit the bank to go into the theatre business, and that just shows you that the banking business is not the only legitimate business for people of ability to engage in.

Here we met Howard Gould who used to sell film out of Omaha but is now selling Gaumont-British film out of Kansas City. Howard is another old friend of ours, doggone him anyhow, and we were glad to meet him.

At Seneca we stopped to call on J. H. Kongs who operates the Royal theatre, but J. H. had gone out in the country to get some antique China ware for his wife and so we failed to meet him, but we did go up to his home and met Mrs. Kongs. Mrs. Kongs gathers antique China ware and if you ever go to Seneca be sure to go up to their home and look over her collection, it will be well worth your while, for she has a very lovely collection.

Marysville has two theatres, one belonging to the Fox organization and the other one independent, and both seemed to be doing a fair business, probably a good wheat prospect being somewhat responsible for it.

Don't ever go through Washington without stopping to see Charlie Swierninski of the Majestic theatre. Charlie is going to put up a new theatre and it will be a good one, too. When we called on him before it, was just after a tornado had hit the town and scattered the court house and other buildings all over the landscape. You will find Charlie a mighty swell boy.

Sam Blair at Belleville has become a farmer, that is we expect Mrs. Blair does most of the farming, anyhow, Sam has left his theatres operation to his nephew, William Blair, and Sam has moved out on his 320 acre farm. We saw Sam at a stock sale in Belleville where he was selling some hogs. He looked just like a farmer, but probably it was a bluff.

The town marshal allowed us to stay over night at Phillipsburg where we met our old friend Winship of the Majestic theatre and who said he was glad to see us again (that always helps us a whole lot). The Majestic is well operated and was doing a good business when we called, just about as we presume it always does, then we drove over to Almena and visited the firm of Rayburn & Bonnie who operate the Rayburn theatre. If you have never been there you ought to go there and see this theatre and meet Mrs. Rayburn, one of the owners and you will find her an excellent lady, and you will find the theatre the pride of Kansas.

Stockton has a new theatre since we called there the last time and it is a good one. It is operated by M. M. Swank and we believe that M. M. knows his business too for he told us he wanted the HERALD, and he is going to get it too, and besides that he knows the theatre business from Hollywood to Rockefeller Center.

We would like to tell you about George Moore at Plainville but Ernie says that will have to go until next time.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

Columbia

HELL SHIP MORGAN: George Bancroft, Ann Sothern—A good action drama that please most patrons. Very entertaining.—Alonzo Swenson, Lincoln Theatre, Clay Center, Kan. General patronage.

IF YOU COULD ONLY COOK: Jean Arthur, Herbert Marshall—A very good light comedy which pleased very much and we are glad to present it to our patrons.—Alonzo Swenson, Lincoln Theatre, Clay Center, Kan. General patronage.

LONE WOLF RETURNS, THE: Melvyn Douglas, Gail Patrick—Columbia's pictures this year for some reason lack the finish and apt direction that makes for audience pictures. While this picture is a great deal better than most of them that we have had this year they seem to lack that certain something that makes for good reaction at the box office. Most of them have lacked a little restraint in this way. The public does not want the impossible and that has been a glaring fault in a lot of them.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—A mighty fine production, the best that Capra has done to date, swell wholesome comedy and a good story, a tribute to any theatre.—Alonzo Swenson, Lincoln Theatre, Clay Center, Kan. General patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Harry Richman—Our patrons liked this picture very much. It had plenty good music and very entertaining throughout. Richman and Rochelle Hudson very good.—Alonzo Swenson, Lincoln Theatre, Clay Center, Kan. General patronage.

SHE COULDN'T TAKE IT: George Raft, Joan Bennett—A good picture with plenty of comedy and thrills. Columbia has been very consistent this year and we are glad to have their product.—Alonzo Swenson, Lincoln Theatre, Clay Center, Kan. General patronage.

First National

BRIDES ARE LIKE THAT: Ross Alexander, Anita Louise—This is a clever comedy and the audience liked it. There is some very smart dialogue in it. Although it had no action, it went over good.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

G MEN, THE: James Cagney, Margaret Lindsay—Played this on a Thursday revival to a good house. There is only one "G Men." Warners stole a march here.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni, Josephine Hutchinson—A very good picture of its kind, but won't carry the mail in the small town. Running time, 81 minutes. Played May 24-25.—R. B. Stiert, Star Theatre, Bridger, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

Franco-American

MARIA CHAPDELAINE: Gaby Triquet—French talkie which may be called wonderful. One of the best French pictures we have played. Enjoyed by all. There were complete English subtitles so that all could understand the picture even though one could not understand the talking as it was in French. The film is taken from the famous novel by Louis Hemon. A picture which was wonderful for children to see as it had not bad scenes in it and all of the children who saw it enjoyed it very much indeed. Several adults came two and three times to see this outstanding cinema of Canada. The entire picture was actually filmed up where the story takes place. It no doubt is a film which has won national and international fame. It won the French cinema prize for one of the best pictures of the year. The stars played their parts remarkably well and showed real power and romantic feeling in every scene that was portrayed. As for the story part of the picture I must say a word for the directing. They did not change the story as most Hollywood people do. They went right to the book and did not put in a single thing extra and did not leave anthing out, not a single detail. I think that this is very wonderful as it is hard to follow a book just as it was written. Another point is that it is another thing to get into the same swing as the author intended his characters in the story to do. However, this was managed and one would think that the story had come to life. Settings were grand, taken right out of doors. Sound was perfect, up to the American recording. Print in A-1 shape. Hope other theatres will play this picture, as we thought it was a great cinema masterpiece. This film will live with such pictures as "La Maternelle," "Thunder Over Mexico," "A Waltz by Strauss," all of which we played and have been proud of. Running time, 77 minutes. Played May 19-21.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. French patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

JACK AHOY: Jack Hulbert—Liked by all. It was a very funny picture which was handled in a clean manner and no slapstick about it. It will do good average business in any American theatre. Of course, we did extra well as it is on a foreign type and we play mostly that type of picture. This was the last picture of our season until next Fall in October. We want to take this time to wish all of the exhibitors who have followed our articles good luck until we open next fall. We also hope that these articles have helped some of you in selecting your pictures. We would like to hear from you at any time. Running time, 74 minutes. Played May 24-25.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Student patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy—Good picture of its type. Gable again the great lover and he had able support in the glamorous Myrna. The clinches were a little prolonged, but then Myrna was an adequate subject for this kind of thing. The lady certainly wears the gowns to good effect. Mae West has nothing on Myrna. Harlow is getting to be a better actress in every picture. She was very good in this.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—Marvelous picture. Ronald Colman is at his best in this picture. Don't be afraid to give this your best playing time. Running time, 126 minutes. Played May 24-25.—J. E. Keegan, Strand Theatre, Grass Valley, Cal. Small town and rural patronage.

Paramount

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Very good. Many good comments. It kept the audience chuckling. Business slightly above average.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

COLLEGIATE: Joe Penner, Jack Oakie—This pleased the majority and did a fair business.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

ATTENTION SHOWMEN AND INVESTORS!

I am acquiring control of all the important theatres in a prosperous city of 500,000 population. It requires approximately $200,000. I can furnish $100,000 and want an experienced and successful showman to come in and invest other half. Will earn over one hundred per cent on investment. Complete information furnished in confidence. Box 714, Motion Picture Herald.

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—Very good show in our estimation. Business low on mid-week dates. Good for Sunday. Running time, 8 reels. Played May 19-20.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

MARY BURNS, FUGITIVE: Sylvia Sidney, Melvyn Douglas—Good. Was well liked. Business fair. —A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

SO RED THE ROSE: Margaret Sullavan, Randolph Scott—Very good. It drew a nice crowd and pleased them all.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Henry Fonda, Sylvia Sidney—Played two days to very good business. This one is a natural. Give it your best playing time. Running time, 106 Minutes. Played May 10-11.—J. E. Keegan, Strand Theatre, Grass Valley, Cal. Small town and rural patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Henry Fonda, Slyvia Sidney—Biggest at box office since silent days. Everybody satisfied. Played April 30-May 1.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. General patronage.

13 HOURS BY AIR: Fred MacMurray, Joan Bennett—Better than average program feature. Patrons satisfied.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. General patronage.

RKO Radio

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Harriet Hilliard—I believe this is the best of the Astaire-Rogers pictures. A wonderful show. Business good on this for a change. Business very dull lately, but was fine on this show. Thanks, RKO. Harriet Hilliard very good in this, as were the other stars.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers, Harriet Hilliard—No worse, no better than rest Astaire-Rogers pictures. Business all right. Patrons satisfied.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. General patronage.

HOT TIP: James Gleason, Zasu Pitts—Our people didn't go for this. We played this to the poorest week-end we ever played to, with good weather, no excuse but the picture, certainly disappointed us.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

LAST DAYS OF POMPEII, THE: Dorothy Wilson, Preston Foster—A gorgeous production that was just wasted on our audience. Didn't make film rental in three days.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

TWO IN REVOLT: Louise Latimer, John Arledge—A very fine picture. Nothing big, but pleasing to all. This picture can be played on week-end with good results. It is a Horse and Dog story with "Warrior" and "Lightning." Also has Arledge (the boy that made a bit in "Shipmates Forever"). Running time, 7 reels.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomanton, Ala. General patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee, Slim Summerville, Buddy Ebson—Again Shirley scores as does all of the cast. This has Buddy Ebson that made a hit in "Broadway Melody" and while he is no matinee idol he is plenty good. He still stays by the sweater and pants and when they can go over dressed that way they have to be good. He has that something that the public likes and maybe it is the change from these artists models that are in so many pictures.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

CONNECTICUT YANKEE, A (Re-Issue): Will Rogers—Good as ever. Since we were somewhat dubious about playing this one in view of its circumstance: a connection no doubt shared by other exhibitors, however, after playing it, we wish to state: you need not be afraid of this re-issue. The print and sound are plenty good and the draw will keep you ahead of the hounds. Let's have more. Running time, 84 minutes. Played May 21-23.—R. B. Stiert, Star Theatre, Bridger, Mont. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Wonderful picture. Did not draw so well at box-office, due to too much advertising on Quintuplets. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 12-14.—J. E. Keegan, Strand Theatre, Grass Valley, Cal. Small town and rural patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Has everything. Big business. Played April 23-24.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. General patronage.

CURLY TOP: Shirley Temple, John Boles, Rochelle Hudson—A well done picture. One of her best, but we played it too late to do any business on it. Running time, 74 minutes. Played May 15-16.—Albert Hefferan, Owl Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich. Children patronage.

KING OF BURLESQUE, THE: Warner Baxter, Alice Faye—This is a good musical, but it fell down hard at the box office. Everyone seeing it was pleased. —A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

NAVY WIFE: Claire Trevor, Ralph Bellamy—This was a pleasant surprise for me and also for the patrons.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—A swell show with no business. I guess the soldier title did not appeal to many and they stayed away. Running time, 9 reels. Played May 17-18.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson, Cesar Romero—A dandy program with a punch and action. Business off. Local conditions bad yet. Running time, 8 reels. Played May 12-13.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—This one pleased. It was a different role for O'Brien, but he handled it perfectly.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MODERN TIMES: Charlies Chaplin, Paulette Goddard—This picture might have gone over fifteen years ago. Our patrons very disappointed and didn't fail to tell us about it. Don't expect too much if you intend to play this picture. Running time, 88 minutes. Played May 26-28.—J. E. Keegan, Strand Theatre, Grass Valley, Cal. Small town and rural patronage.

RED SALUTE: Barbara Stanwyck, Robert Young —An extra good entertaining picture suitable for any situation. Did only normal business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Can. General patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor, Ethel Merman —Average Cantor feature. Average business for Cantor. Played May 4-5.—Kenneth Richardson, Richardson Theatre, Seneca, S. C. General patronage.

Universal

EAST OF JAVA: Charles Bickford, Elizabeth Young—Fair show for Friday and Saturday. Action and suspense. The lions fighting with Bickford very real. Running time, 8 reels. Played May 16.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SUTTER'S GOLD: Edward Arnold, Binnie Barnes —Disappointed in this one. Very much over-rated; no continuity; Tracy mis-cast. Played three days to poor business. Running time, 95 minutes. Played May 5-7.—J. E. Keegan, Strand Theatre, Grass Valley, Cal. Small town and rural patronage.

SWEET SURRENDER: Frank Parker, Tamara—We thought this was a good program picture. Played on bargain night. Business awful! (Thanks to a newly arrived Skating Rink).—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—A very good picture. Taken from Sinclair Lewis' novel "Main Street." I sent the wives of local doctors and some out-to-town doctors free tickets to this show. Believe it caused a little bit of good advertisement. If you have this picture bought, book it on the 4th of July. It shows a short scene or two of a July 4th celebration. Several nice comments on this picture. Running time, 9 reels. Played May 28-29.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Edward L. Klein has acquired world distribution rights, including the United States and Canada, of "Royal Eagle," a new British film which is being distributed in England by Columbia.

U.S. Films Safe From Anzac Quota

American motion pictures are in little danger of losing their dominant position in Australia despite the recent progress of British pictures and the efforts to expand the local motion picture industry, according to a report to the Department of Commerce from Assistant Trade Commissioner W. C. Flake in Sydney.

Of the 481 feature films censored for exhibition in Australia in 1935, the United States supplied 353; the United Kingdom, 123; and other countries, 5. In addition to these, two locally-made feature films were made and shown in the country, the report states.

At the present time, there are approximately 1,300 motion picture theatres in Australia, all of which are wired for sound. Many new theatres have been built in the past two years, some of which compare very favorably with the best in the United States, it was said.

A development of interest in connection with the Commonwealth's motion picture industry was the introduction last year of quota legislation for Australian pictures in the states of New South Wales and Victoria, which together contain two-thirds of the country's total population. It is not expected, however, that this development will have any adverse reaction on imports of American films.

The local producing industry consists of five studios, in which the combined investments amount to approximately $400,000. Pictures produced in Australia are accepted as British quota pictures in England and several have been shown there. The success of these pictures has encouraged Australian producers to obtain the services of oversea stars in order that their productions may appeal in England and elsewhere.

Look for Spread In New Quotas

New quota laws to encourage the development of film production in Australia become effective in New South Wales and Victoria this season and are expected to be duplicated in all other Australian states in the near future, James Thornley, manager of Paramount's Capitol at Melbourne, who is in New York en route to England, said this week.

The quota laws apply to both exhibitors and distributors and are for a five-year duration. The exhibitors' quota, which is closely paralleled by that for distributors, specifies that four per cent of his bookings must be of Australian origin during the first year of the quota, and increase annually up to 15 per cent in the fifth year. The law becomes effective for distributors in the two states next month and for exhibitors in October.

Mr. Thornley related that safeguards have been incorporated in the laws which eliminate many of the obnoxious features of quotas generally. An impartial board is set up to determine whether pictures offered by Australian producers measure up to an accepted production standard. Three of approximately seven Australian-made pictures submitted to this board have been rejected already.

DENMARK JOINS U.S. IN 16mm. FILM STANDARDS

Definite Progress Reported in Adopting 16mm Sound Film Standards Throughout World

Following the lead of other countries, Denmark has adopted the standards of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers pertaining to 16mm. sound film, according to word the Society received this week from the International Standards Association at Geneva.

Following closely upon the decision of Great Britain, also in favor of the SMPE 16mm. standards, the Society said this week that considerable progress is being made toward attainment of a worldwide set of specifications for 16mm. equipment and films, which is a rich but as yet undeveloped field.

The decision of the Danish industry was communicated by the Danish Standardizing Society to the Deutscher Normenausschuss the secretariat for the International Standards Association in polling the preferences of countries with national standards organizations with respect to 16mm. specifications.

The issue was raised last summer at conferences at Paris and Berlin, at which a set of proposals was advanced by the Germans that would put the sound track on the opposite edge of the film from that specified by the SMPE and would also transpose the position of the emulsion with respect to the sound track.

It subsequently was decided that the German unit serve under the International Standards Association in determining the adherence of the industries in various countries affected.

Adopted by Several Nations

Besides the United States and Denmark, the American standards have been adopted by England, Canada, Australia and other British possessions, and Holland.

Hungary, Russia and Switzerland have signified approval of the German standards, but have indicated their willingness to adopt the SMPE specifications. Austria and France are divided in opinion, and no definite statements have been forthcoming from Sweden, Italy, Poland and Czechoslovakia.

It is believed, however, that Italy and the Scandinavian countries will adhere to the standards which gain majority approval. The American standards have been accepted by the countries responsible for the bulk of the 16mm. business, it was said, and the American manufacturers now feel that they can proceed with technical and commercial promotion without fear of being stalemated because of the threatened wide confusion of standards.

Conference August 31st

A conference at which a world standard for 16mm. film will be a major topic has been called by the International Standards Association in Budapest, starting August 31st. American interests will not be represented because they feel that their position was adequately explained at the Paris session last year and because of the expense involved in sending a delegation.

The Germans, however, and those favorable to the German standards will be represented in Budapest, and some tangible developments are expected. It was reported that the German factors might be successful in swinging the Balkan states in its direction.

Meanwhile, as part of its endeavor to have the countries of the world adopt the American standard, the SMPE is revising its 16mm. standards and, without changing the content, will clarify them so as to obviate any possible misunderstanding such as gave rise to the confusion over our specifications in Germany.

The revision will be completed in about two months, when the sttandards will again be certified to the American Standards Association, which has approved the SMPE specifications as standard for the United States.

Peru Imports Are Off; U. S. Product Leading

Imports of films into Peru during 1935 totaled 9,275 kilograms, as compared with 11,099 kilograms during the preceding year, reports Commercial Attaches Julian Greenup from Lima to the Department of Commerce. The decrease, however, is within the limits of normal fluctuation, the report explains.

The portion of the trade falling to the United States has held close to 85 per cent of the total. In 1935, the percentage of imports from various countries was: United States, 85.03; England, 3.55; Germany, 2.98; Japan, 3.06; France, 2.47, and Spain, 1.50.

Lustberg Opening Sound Studio in Argentine

Jack Lustberg, Argentine representative for RCA Victor and distributor of Liberty Pictures, with headquarters in Buenos Aires, is opening a sound studio there under the name of Fotofono Argentina.

Mr. Lustberg is now preparing his first Argentine independent production, with shooting scheduled to start about the end of June. The Argentine industry has an ambitious plan for 30 features next year and a contingent bill is now before the Senate for study.

New Producing Firm in Copenhagen

Assistant Trade Commissioner Paul H. Pearson, Copenhagen, Denmark, says that reports are current to the effect that a new company will be formed for the production of Danish feature and advertising films. It is said that part of the studio equipment will be purchased abroad and part will be delivered by a Danish manufacturer, Bang and Olufsen, Copenhagen.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 27.—(A) Name the important points with regard to commutator brushes. (B) Does an amplifier act to convert weak currents into strong ones? Explain fully. [Note: Does reducing the number of questions to two a week and printing a greater number of individual answers meet your approval? Please advise.]

Bluebook School Question No. 20 was: (A) What is photo-electric metal? (B) What is the effect of oil upon insulation? (C) Upon what various things does a perfect film splice depend?

The following made acceptable replies to Question No. 20: C. Rau and S. Evans D. Danielson; B. DeVietti; G. E. Doe; H. Edwards; C. L. Loft; P. and L. Felt; J. R. Prater; W. H. Edmonds; T. F. Bochert; W. C. Brown; H. B. Smith; W. Limmroth; J. A. Callahan; A. L. Cooper; C. Champney; M. and J. DeVoy; F. W. Gumbel; C. Lonie; E. Toedte; R. and K. Wells; L. N. Morgan and D. Morgan; H. Catlin; C. Hawkens; T. H. Morton; F. H. and L. Klar; R. E. Jacobson; F I. Daniels, W. B. Maxwell, M. Maden and P. L. Price; H. Winkle and R. R. Robins; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; W. V. Cramer; A. L. Leonard; T. G. Gregerson; W. R. Cohn; S. G. Sanders and G. Sargent; L. B. Hardy; D. Emmerson; L. A. Dodson and H T. Todd; S. Morgan and J. N. Logan; J. Jensen and V. Sanders; A. L. Long and J. T. McGuire; G. Thompson; S. Dalbey; D. L. Maxwell; K. B. Samuelson; L. Henderson and K. L. Knight; C. L. Sexton; D. L. Slinger and W. H. Remick; B. R. Shepherd and J. Jones; H. D. Lilly and B. M. Commerford; J. R. Middleton and J. R. Lomax; B. L. Jennings; S. True; E. Baxter; H. J. Abernathy and R. Tompkins; H. D. Zillanger; C. and S. E. Gay; O. L. Daris and F. Simms; W. Morrison and O. Hunt; U. O. Banning; G. E. Doris and J. Turner; J. R. Jacobs and B. B. Hornstein; R. Mills and J. N. Perkins; M. Y. Joy; D. Pollock; G. H. Anderson; H. B. Maulding; N. E. Olliver and D. McGee; F. L. and L. Savlor and G N. Guidotti; S. Davis and H. T. McNeil; L. L. Simms; D. N. Richards and R. T. Tomlinson; W. D. Bannock; R. W. Williams, J. Pracer and B. L. Jennings; H. Snow and L. B. Smith; T. R. Schwartz and F. L. Ross.

C. Hawkens says, "All metals discharge or emit negatrons when exposed to light, but certain ones, caesium and potassium, for example, are very sensitive to light action in this respect and are known as photo-electric metals. When exposed to strong light they send out clouds of them, the emission being exactly proportional to the light contacting their surfaces."

(B) B. DiVietti says, "Oil is injurious to insulation for the reason that rubber softens under its action. It also causes the rubber to swell."

C. Rau and S. Evans reply, "The action of oil upon insulation is harmful. As regards rubber-covered wire, it penetrates and destroys the rubber. As to armature insulation, oil will soften the insulation, and while the oil itself acts as in insulator, oil-soaked insulation tends to collect dust and grit that may and probably will, in time, cause short circuits."

M. and J. DeVoy say, "Contact with oil tends to soften and destroy rubber, hence it is injurious to all insulation of which rubber forms a part."

(C) G. E. Doe says, "The important points in the making of a good splice in film are (a) good cement, (b) film cut perfectly square, (c) stub end of proper length (concerning which there is honest difference of opinion; personally, I hold that what we call the two-hole splice gives best general results in theatre projection rooms), (d) all emulsion scraped off stub end (with celluloid left clean, roughened and bare; celluloid side of other film end scraped to remove all dirt and oil and to slightly roughen the surface), (f) all surface of stud end covered with cement with only one stroke of the brush, (g) enough cement to cover (but as little surplus as possible, as it will squeeze out and may adhere to face of tension shoes if there be excessive tension, as is too often the case), (h) a film splicer that will insure perfect sprocket hole matching and apply heavy, evenly distributed tension."

There, gentlemen, that seems to be a most excellent and very complete reply. I shall publish several other answers, some of them by good men, too, but without names because I merely wish to illustrate how far from complete they are, though correct so far as they go.

"A perfect film splice depends upon care in its making. There must be good cement and good tools. A well adjusted film splicer must be used, since though it is possible to make a fairly good splice by hand, there will always be the tendency to not match sprocket holes perfectly; also, there is the possibility of lengthening or shortening the combined length of the two frames involved, viewed as a whole, which cannot happen if a good splicer in good condition be used. Then, too, a splicer applies even pressure, which the fingers cannot possibly do, hence the hand-made splice does not weld evenly all over its surface."

Here is one that in fact covers most points and has the virtue of brevity: "A perfect film splice is dependent upon a true cut, so that the frame ends match perfectly, sufficient splice width to provide strength, clean scraping to remove all emulsion and oil, but not too much of the celluloid, a good grade of cement applied sparingly and rapidly and pressure applied evenly over the entire splice."

"Careful, intelligent work, a good splicing machine or block, which must be kept in good mechanical condition, and a good film cement are essential to the making of a good film splice," which is all correct, but leaves out quite a few details.

"A perfect film splice depends upon three factors; namely, careful work, good cement and proper splicing equipment," which, again, leaves out many highly essential details.

This, gentlemen, is a school, hence you are asked to devote some thought to your answers, making them concise, but at the same time including all essential details.

Brother Doe's answer is correct and about as short as it could be, and at the same time be regarded as a complete answer to the question. Carlyle Lonie, an Indiana man and a new "student," made the next best answer. He briefly named about all the essentials, as also did D. Danelson, B. DeVietti and J. R. Prater.

CONCERTED FIGHT LOOMS ON B & K GRIP ON PRODUCT IN CHICAGO AREA

Granting of Week's Clearance on "C" Pictures Found More Complicated Problem Than When First Broached Last Fall

Allied and Essaness Coalition Strengthens Opposition; Jack Miller Called Possible Recruit with Resignation as Assn. Head

by BILL CROUCH
in Chicago

Chicago exhibitors are on edge. Anxiously they await the results of the selling season of next year's film product. The reason is that in the deals to be made there are numerous difficulties that will have to be ironed out before exhibitors, both independent and circuit, will be satisfied with the results.

Perhaps the most difficult problem to be worked out first will be the "C" week clearance situation. Last year B & K made a strong fight for this extra seven days' clearance between "C" week and the first week of release. They did not get it at that time but they did get a promise from the distributors that it would be given them this year.

Since the time this promise was made the local theatre setup has been undergoing what many think is a revolutionary change. The result is that many Film Row persons believe that the granting of the clearance to B & K will not be as simple a thing as it was considered late last fall.

The reasons, many of them possible but not too probable, are these: First, the Chicago Exhibitors Association with the withdrawal of the Essaness Theatres and the resignation of Jack Miller, guiding genius of the group, has become of comparatively little importance. In fact it is the general belief that it will cease to exist after July 1, when the Miller term of office comes to an end.

Another reason advanced why B & K will have to fight for the clearance is the Allied Theatre group. With the joining of Essaness theatres to this group it now assumes major importance on the local theatre battlefront. Besides Allied's independent groups the Essaness, Jones, Linick and Schaeffer concern and many smaller circuits are now in the Allied fold and ready to put up a united front for what they consider right.

Jack Miller, now out of the Exhibitor Association setup, is expected to be against the granting of clearance to B & K as it will seriously affect several theatres which he operates, if the clearance is granted the major circuit. To have him on the opposition would not be very pleasant for those opposed, as his influence in theatrical circles here is well known.

UA Sells Away from B & K

Brought out for consideration by those who are taking a major interest in Chicago's theatre situation are the results of United Artists selling their product away from B & K this year. For the first time in years this major company released its product in the neighborhoods through independent theatres rather than through B & K. The results of this move, from a revenue angle, are said to be very gratifying and it is known that other major companies have been giving the matter serious consideration. B & K's domination in the film buying field for years has been so strong that distributors have given them first choice on all product for showing outside the loop and for the most part in the loop. But when a big company sells away from B & K and presumably gets as much or more revenue, those who make the plans stop and do a little figuring. In fact the coming selling season may see one or two more major distributors seriously consider pulling away from B & K if they do not make deals that satisfy them.

12 GALLON TEXAS HAT TOO MUCH FOR YATES

Herbert J. Yates, of Consolidated Film Laboratories, who attended the Republic convention in Chicago last week, left Chicago suffering from "tired ears." The last day of the meeting Claude Ezell, Texas exhibitor and an emissary from his excellency the governor of Texas, presented Yates with a commission in the Texas Rangers and a twelve gallon hat. The skypiece was a size eight and that was too much for Mr. Yates, whose 6 and ⅞'s wasn't suitable in keeping the sombrero off his ears.

Theatre Availability

And getting down to theatres that are or may be available for the opposition groups these ideas come to mind. With Essaness on the independent side a group of some twenty houses on the north and west sides enter in. On the south Warners and several smaller circuits have important houses. Jones, Linick and Schaeffer with the Tower, now operated by B & K under 10-year lease, the State-Lake and possibly the McVickers in the loop and with a chance that the Granada and Marbro may come under their control, the possibilities for very strong opposition to B & K are many.

In the loop the United Artists theatre is a possible center of contention. Metro is known to be after the house and may make a deal for it when the theatre is available which is not far distant. With the MGM franchise for film running out in about a year the film firm is understood to be more than anxious to get control of this theatre which is owned by United Artists and which could be operated on a mutually agreeable basis.

One can look for fireworks along the lake front almost any day now.

The latest double bill comments are those regarding the poll Warner Bros. are taking locally and nationally as well. In order to get public sentiment on the matter they are having women canvassers in this territory address church and school groups to find out how many people prefer the double-feature plan—how many times a week they go to the show, and so on. The national results will be announced in a few weeks after a canvassing directed toward 8,000,000 persons.

Eddie Levine, B & K p.a., is off on the high seas bound for Europe. He will ride the American Shipper to England and on his return, in three weeks, will take the new Queen Mary for New York. Eddie says if she doesn't break a record on his trip he'll ask for a refund.

In preparation for the sales convention held at the Blackstone, the Warner projection room was given a thorough overhauling. New seats, wall decorations, lights and acoustical treatment were a part of the modernization. Even the projection equipment was remodeled and made ready for the showing of the big super-specials that were previewed for the visiting delegates.

Not only did he get the stories planted but he gave the new company the type of news break heretofore granted only to few concerns.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

BEFORE CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS

Of interest of course but not greatly surprising is the assertion of Phil Reisman, Radio Pictures foreign head, and other of his associates, that high-power exploitation methods found so effective on this side are in favor across the water. These opinions, set down in articles on following pages and confirmed in the accounts of exploitations in other lands, are the contributions of Radio-ites which make up this Round Table's Guest Section.

Spectacle, color, thrills, pageantry and divers ingredients compounded so imaginatively by American exploiteers are familiar enough to Europe and the Far East. Now well-seasoned by new world speed and audacity, these attributes to exploitation are reclaimed by our brother-showmen over the water.

And expertly indeed do they handle the bally to intrigue their public as did the masters of magic in ye olden times, long, long before Christopher Columbus gnawed on his first teething ring.

SERIOUS OMISSION

In Cleveland last week gathered some hundreds of independent exhibitors, distributors, legislators and others to take part in the Allied convention. Many industry classifications were represented—but no managers.

Almost every possible subject was discussed, most every slant that had to do at all with exhibition was taken apart and put together. That is, most every slant — except advertising and exploitation.

Producers announce fat exploitation angles in the new product, circuit executives spotlight drives for better business at the boxoffice, home office advertising departments bang the drum with exploitation contests. The air is filled with projects that depend for success upon the participation, the ingenuity, the talents and enthusiasm of the theatre manager, but at the Allied convention there was nothing on the printed program that had to do with the manager or the part he plays in keeping the theatre out of the red.

Reduction of operating expense, fighting new taxes and reform movements, equitable playdates, and what have you were all featured in the three-day meet, but nary a nod to what should be done to get the most out of the product after it was bought.

Relegation of theatre exploitation to the outer darkness at exhibitor conventions is a serious omission. The business of selling the picture at the boxoffice should concern theatremen in convention as much as the buying of product.

DO A GOOD JOB OF WELDING

Your Round Table is pleased to indicate an extra bow in the direction of Senn Lawler, editor of Fox Midwest Theatres managers' circuit organ, "Contact"—a four-page weekly now concerned among other things with the publicizing of the Spring contest for bigger 'n' better grosses. The "other things" it aims to do, and ably, include serving all department heads as means of general communication, acting as an idea exchange between managers, throwing bouquets to the talented, conveying unified ad campaigns.

There should be more of these well-printed and interesting house organs in circulation. They accomplish a whale of a lot in keeping manager-morale high and in welding widely scattered organization branches closer together.

POOR OLE JOE

Socked again—and Joe Doakes is out. Yesshuh, poor Joe just lost his job and it was so promising, too. Came well recommended, started off swell, and the future looked rosy. Folks did say he was sure an up-and-coming manager and the boss even promised him a day off regularly as soon as the score charge was reduced.

But overnight it happened—grief and misery on a double-bill. Joe tried to learn the reason but only silence met his frenzied queries. His friends turned away—all but one. That pal, white to the lips, finally blurted out the horrible truth.

The week before Doakes had forgotten to rubber-stamp the paper bags at the corner grocery.

A New York magistrate, fining a group of sidewalk photographers, pointed out complications that might arise from the candid-cameraing. "Suppose you took a picture of a married man and some woman not his wife, or a married woman and a man. You might not mean to but you might get them into trouble."

No doubt the photographers complained that the judge was hardly "doing justice" to their pictures.

Art Murch Installs New Mailing List

Started only a short time, the installation of a new mailing list idea has already begun to function says Manager Art Murch, of the M. & P. North Shore, in Gloucester, Mass. Trailer is run inviting patrons to place their names on the new list and to fill out cards in the lobby. Cards include the line, "permanent or summer resident" which helps to keep the list most effective at all times of the year.

After patrons fill out card, left with ushers or cashiers, personal letter under the manager's signature is sent out the next day carrying assurances of excellent service, good entertainment and also calling attention to the free parking space. From then on, patron gets a printed postcard each week, with all details of the following seven day's programs plus a few lines policy plugging,

The personal letter slant as employed by this Round Tabler is a very good talking point and takes the entire transaction away from the usually conventional procedure of obtaining patrons names for mailing.

Foresman's "Fever" Warning

For "Petticoat Fever" Frank Foresman at the Ritz in West Point, Miss., distributed small cards printed in red on yellow stock, copy reading: "Beware of Petticoat Fever." In order that you may protect yourself from this aggravating malady, see Robert Montgomery, the victim of this disease, and Myrna Loy, the cure for it, at the Ritz Theatre." Frank reports he wrote the copy and the cards were grabbed up.

JUNE DEADLINE; JUNE JUDGES

Midnight of Tuesday, July 7, is the deadline date for entries in the Quigley June Awards. So, please, have those campaigns at headquarters by that time.

The June judges are as follows: Neil F. Agnew, Paramount Pictures, Inc.; Mort Blumenstock, Warner Bros. Theatres, and J. R. Vogel, Loew's, Inc.

Pollock Goes Blotto On "Small Town" Contest

Les Pollock at Loew's Rochester, Rochester, N. Y., has undoubtedly done much to increase the sales of pumice up his way, what with the "Blotto" contest he put over on "Small Town Girl." Through cooperating newspaper, Les offered cash prizes and tickets to folks turning in best samples of blotto signatures. And this is the way it's done:

Take a sheet of paper, fold it in half and directly thru the crease with the ink write your name. Without blotting the signature, refold the paper and press finger across it. Result? Well, Les forwards substantiating evidence that one signature turned out to be a Javanese dancer.

On "Mr. Deeds," Les planted another contest in newspaper offering tickets and cash to those submitting best letters on "What I would do if I were to inherit $20,000,000?" Serialization was run and reviewers treated picture extravagantly.

DiPesa Garners Fine Publicity On "Afternoon"

What he reports an unusual amount of publicity space was obtained by Joe DiPesa for his campaign on "One Rainy Afternoon" at Loew's State and Orpheum Theatres, Boston. The Evening Globe ran a five day illustrated serialization tying in fact that Donald Meek, originally from Boston, was in the cast. Paver also runs feature strip of New Englanders in Hollywood and Joe arranged to have Meek spotted prominently in both morning and evening editions.

Inquiring Reporter of the Record gave picture additional publicity with his question, "What do you consider the best way to spend One Rainy Afternoon?" Six co-op ads were secured from prominent department and specialty stores which he supplemented with 41 complete window displays.

Builds 12-Foot Tank For "Pine" Lobby Set

The spacious inner lobby of the Stadium Theatre, Los Angeles, gives Manager W. C. Ricord, plenty of latitude for his talent in creating unusual displays on his top attractions. Latest instance is the outstanding flash on "Lonesome Pine" illustrated to left, in which one of the features was a 12-foot tank that served as a lake. Ricord details the construction of the display as follows:

Back drop in the display was painted in natural colors, comprising a mountain scene with lake and pine trees in the foreground. Trees in the display are all pines, cut and brought to the theatre by the staff at no cost. Sixty-five sacks of soil were used for the floor and the lake in the center was made of a tank, 12 feet long by eight wide and six inches deep. Tank was filled with water into which was poured bluing to give a natural color. Wheel on the side of house was rotated by small motor churning the water.

Boulders also were brought by the ushers and the figures, life-like cutouts of the stars. Stuffed dog was borrowed from taxidermist and used too.

Over entire display was focused varicolored spots to emphasize the natural color and behind the scene loud speaker carried the theme songs played by portable victrola. Installation of the display took 16 hours in which Ricord credits assistance of his staff for the smart effect.

Ties "Bullets" Date to Primary Election

Over in New Jersey, few weeks back, there was quite a lot of excitement over the primary elections and the phrase "bullet balloting" was all over the front pages. The slant gave Rudy Kuehn and Bob Deitch, over at the Stanley, in Jersey City, just what they wanted on their advance for "Bullets or Ballots" and immediately covered a lot of stands throughout the county with the teasers illustrated below.

Then three days ahead, posters were sniped with the date, stars, theatre and rest of the show, the result to the showmen being quite satisfactory. "Just another stunt where we took advantage of the local headlines," says Deitch.

Novel Ad Ideas Help Fred Reeths

Different and attention-holding are the novelty herald and other program ideas forwarded by Fred Reeths, Jr., of the Sheboygan Theatre, Sheboygan, Wis. For instance, an effective medium is what Reeths calls his "Confidential Five," a two-fold program, two inches wide by six deep, just big enough to fit into the vest pocket. Copy on front reads: "Confidential Guide to the Big Five, coming to your Sheboygan. Keep for vest-pocket information." Three spaces on inside and back cover carry the week's program, and Fred says that very few are thrown away.

Another herald that clicked carried front cover copy: "Advice to Back Seat Drivers" with inside copy: "If you don't like the way I drive, get out and walk. But I'll let you off to see, etc., etc."

Die-cut diamond shaped novelty to plug a November Harvest of Hits flipped up when opened to display Fred's photo and copy: "Imagine that I am talking to you personally" with the rest of the spread given over to the coming attractions.

Danger Cards Distributed By Hinks on "Solomon"

With a view to word of mouth publicity, W. Hinks, Alex Cinema, Paisley, England, for "King Solomon of Broadway" distributed small cards with the following copy, "STOP worrying, it isn't worth it, LOOK, we offer a cure AND LISTEN to the finest talkie to date." Reverse side carried little spiel on the futility of worrying.

WATERSON, STALLMAN VOTED MAY AWARDS

Indiana Showman Is Awarded Silver Plaque; Bronze Goes to Bethlehem, Pa., Manager

by A-MIKE VOGEL

In what has been one of the closest runs in the history of the Quigley Awards, the votes of the judges send the Quigley May plaques to two first-timers. R. W. Waterson of the Hoosier Theatre, Whiting, Indiana, receives the Silver for his excellent campaign on "Klondike Annie" and finishing right behind Waterson in this neck to neck race comes J. Lester Stallman of the College Theatre, Bethlehem, Penna., who was awarded the May Bronze for outstanding exploitation on "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town."

Waterson is the second Indiana-Illinois Theatres manager to come through as a 1936 winner of one of the coveted Quigley plaques, Sid Holland, Elco Theatre, Elkhart, Ind., copping the Silver in March for "Music Goes Round."

And right up at the top of the First Mentions list comes Sid Blumenstock, publicist for Warner's Atlantic City theatres with a bang-up job for the one-day engagement of "Midsummer Night's Dream," followed closely by an overseas showman, Tony Reddin, at the Paramount Theatre in Liverpool, England.

The battle for May was close enough to bring several entrants to the finish together, which necessitated the awarding this month of four First Mentions. In addition to Blumenstock and Reddin, Certificates go to Matt Saunders of the Poli in Bridgeport, who put over the premiere of "Ziegfeld Follies" at the Majestic Theatre there while Morris Rosenthal was vacationing, and Paul Allender at the Boyd in Bethlehem, Penna., for "Captain January."

Among the nineteen Honorable Mentions, it is interesting to note that nine have clicked with their first entries in the competition. Canadian and overseas houses were again represented, as were subsequent neighborhood theatres competing successfully with de luxe and other first runs.

Listing of the First and Honorable Mentions will be found in column to the right. Their Sheepskin Certificates go forth shortly.

Judging the Awards this month were: Hy Daab, Columbia Pictures Corporation; Albert Deane, Paramount Distributing Corp., and Charles Leonard, Universal Pictures Corp.

Anniversary Celebration Sold with Co-op Ad

With the Hollywood Theatre, Buchanan, Mich., celebrating its first birthday on "Dangerous," Assistant Earl Hoffman promoted merchants for a co-op page. Each ad contained tiein copy on pictures to be shown at the theatre, such as druggist using "it's Dangerous to use cheap cosmetics."

Exploitation-minded, indeed, are the overseas film men of the far-flung RKO Radio Pictures organization whose activities are supervised by able Phil Reisman; and in line with the policy of stressing these foreign activities, your Round Table is pleased to present in the following pages various accounts and photos of what these showmen in foreign countries are doing for the boxoffice.

Articles on different phases of publicity and exploitation are incorporated, all in all making up a cross-section of the situation in Continental Europe and the Far East. The countries represented include the United Kingdom, Brazil, Peru, Costa Rica, Australia, India, Austria, Hungary, Sweden, Poland, Japan, Mexico, Egypt, Spain, Panama and Cuba.

To Michael Hoffay, RKO Radio's foreign publicity manager, an extra bow for his enthusiastic co-operation in gathering and preparing this material from all corners of the globe.

EXPLOITATION STRESSED IN HANBURY TERRITORY

Proper emphasis is laid upon effective exploitation in the home offices and exchanges of Radio Pictures, Ltd., says Ralph Hanbury, chairman of the Board and Managing Director, in the following:

"Exploitation always plays a big part in our activities. Fan magazines, newspapers and periodcals are regularly serviced by our publicity department with interesting material. Shop window displays in connection with the premiere or general release of a film is a form of exploitation we go in for extensively. . . .

"Radio broadcasts are being successfully used by us particularly in publicising films of a musical type, as naturally radio lends itself to musicals."

Operations of Radio Pictures in the United Kingdom cover nine exchanges, servicing England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, and as far off as Malta and Gibraltar.

Britton Circularizes Harmonica Players

Cashing in on the unusual popularity that harmonicas enjoy in Shanghai, Leon Britton, Peacock Motion Picture Company, for "Follow the Fleet" conceived the brilliant idea of getting harmonica musical scores printed free of charge. These, with the lyrics in English and bound with covers containing harmonica dealers' and other ads all printed in the Chinese vernacular were distributed.

Constructs New Front For "Becky Sharp"

An effective theatre front was constructed for "Becky Sharp" by A. Herman, publicity and exploitation manager for RKO Radio Films in Poland, aided by Igo Kron, manager of the Apollo Theatre.

Giant display (see photo) covered the upper two stories of building and every color in the rainbow was used to handpaint the letters of the title, each letter measuring seven feet in height. The head of Miriam Hopkins measured 12 feet and was also beautifully colored.

GETTING BEHIND THE SHOW

Managers of Foreign Branches Are Publicity and Advertising Minded; Use American Methods

by PHIL REISMAN

Vice-President and General Manager, Radio Export Corporation

If it is true that the success of a big picture can be made still greater by exploiting it along progressive and effective methods, the same holds true to a greater degree in most foreign territories, where exploitation of RKO Radio pictures is actively carried on according to their particular requirements.

This does not mean of course that exploitation should be confined exclusively to super-specials, as the contrary seems to be the rule rather than the exception in all of the territories under my control.

The very same complexity of problems that are present in the world-wide distribution of pictures go hand in hand with the variety of exploitation and publicity methods in the same territories. We are fortunate indeed to have the service of seasoned exploitation men at the head of our various foreign branch offices, real showmen who know the tricks of the trade and who work very closely with the foreign sales managers so that the formulation of a sales policy may be taken full advantage of by the Publicity and Exploitation Departments.

It is hardly possible to strike up a formula for successful publicity and exploitation that will work out uniformly throughout the world with as many lingual, racial and geographic differences as there are countries.

Advocates Plugging All Pictures

On two single points the entire world seems to be of an accord—i.e., action and star values. When the picture moves at a rapid pace to convey the meaning of the story to the spectator, with a minimum of spoken words, that picture stands a better than average chance, and when a player becomes sufficiently and favorably known in any given country, whether it be India, Brazil or the United Kingdom, he or she has definite star value and half the battle is won for the publicity and exploitation men, but there is no question of a doubt that a judicious amount of exploitation should be carried on all program pictures and in a much larger scale on super-specials, although there seems to be a misguided idea that a real super-super needs no greater exploitation than the average production because of the fallacious belief that its own star and spectacular values will, in themselves, carry it over the top.

Other factors affect exploitation to quite a degree. Take the picture "She," for instance. Certain countries would not swallow the story as a whole, but in a good many, the spectators took it to their bosom with delight. The story appealed to their imaginations and their appetite for this kind of spectacular production was properly whetted by the exploitation men in the field with elaborate campaigns.

"King Kong" is another case in point. It gave the exploitation men unlimited fields to work upon and all countries of the world shivered in delight at the exploits of the giant gorilla, which became so famous as to serve as a newly coined by-word in the vernacular of the day.

These examples apply, of course, to "freak" pictures and are only meant to convey the opportunity they afford exploitation men to go the limit in their efforts. The success of regular productions based strictly on star values depend as much on the production value of the picture itself as on the advance publicity that the star may have received on that or any other pictures previously released.

All Heads Publicity-Minded

I am happy to say, however, that all of our foreign Branch Managers are publicity and exploitation minded to the nth degree and that great thought and care are given to the preparation of each and every campaign, as I have been able to verify in my various trips overseas and as I know to be a fact in all those other countries that I have as yet not had the opportunity of visiting personally. In the United Kingdom, of course, exploitation campaigns are carried on vigorously through the press, radio broadcasting, poster displays and merchandising tieups, with as much intensity as in the United States. Other countries have their own particular forms of exploitation: Central Europe, for instance, promotes poster displays on specially built street kiosks, also street car advertising is favored and the use of any sort of street posts is taken advantage of, the reason being that most power lines are still carried on poles overhead. In the Far East there are as many restrictions as there are separate countries, but in the Latin American countries, there are practically no restrictions at all, outside of those that fall within the jurisdiction of the censors.

American Methods Followed

High pressure exploitation methods, as usually practised in America are slowly but surely creeping up throughout all foreign countries where their use has been looked upon so far with disfavor, the only disadvantage being that in a good many territories the local authorities when in need of additional revenue always seem to grasp any good exploitation idea that through its own merits becomes extremely popular in the public's mind, and as fast as exploitation men create new methods, additional sources of revenue find their way into public treasuries.

However, this is not a deterrent to enterprising exploitation minded managers and showmen whose efforts in foreign territories are highly contributive towards the phenomenal growth which RKO Radio pictures are registering throughout the world and I take advantage of this medium to convey to our personnel and distributing outlets our heartiest thanks for their unflagging energy and enterprise.

CREATING COMPLICATIONS

Some Exploitation "Musts" and "Must Nots" In Various Sectors Are Detailed by Radio Exploiteer

by EUGEN SCHARIN

Continental Europe Exploitation Manager

Maybe it were better to headline this article: "How to get into trouble?" On second thought, however, I may as well let it go as it is, for it would hardly be news to anybody for me to tell them that an exploitation man is bound to get into trouble, not that it matters, for he'll wriggle himself out of it again; that's just why he became an exploitation man—am I right, boys?

Chorus of all the little Houdinis: And how!

Well, there are probably more widely different traps in Europe than anywhere else on the globe. Parts of Europe, relatively speaking, have only recently become publicity or even exploitation conscious and greater parts of the continent are not awakened to it yet, at least not in the sense we would welcome. To very many governments, city authorities, etc., publicity is just one thing more to be regulated and milked at one and the same time. For, a man who wants to do some publicity must certainly be a rich man—would he otherwise want to spend his money on silly posters or crazy stunts? And if he is a rich man he ought to be taxed, here and there and everywhere. Isn't that as clear as the sky on a rainy day?

The "You-Can'ts and Don'ts"

First, there are the "You-Can't-Boys." This is not a new dance team or something but merely the local lads who tell the poor traveling exploitation man "you can't do this here" and "of course, that you can't do here, either!" The chant-leader is the exhibitor who dislikes stunts as most often they'll get him into trouble with the authorities, the tax people or his girl friend. Now, don't think that this is the wrong article, there will be lots of other things you wouldn't believe!

After the "You-Can't-Boys" have done their stuff, the show really starts. Next you are confronted with the "Don't Fellows," or you've got it by now, I'm sure, the authorities themselves, taking your money first for receiving the information, then for considering your ideas and filing them away correctly and finally for turning them down. The "Don'ts" are as numerous as they are dumb, but you still have to obey them except in one Eastern European capital where thumbs down you get information about how much you will have to pay for violation of rules. For this bit of nicety you pay a little extra tax and is everyone happy? You can bet your last couple of passes everybody is.

In Stockholm things are simpler. It says: "Don't" (or: "You can't") do anything on the streets. No banners, no lamp-posts, no extra signs, no parades, no street stunts, no ballyhoo, nothing. There are a few poster columns or pillars, and there it ends. (On the other hand, the press in Stockholm gives you a big hand, but that's another story.)

Now in Paris it gets more tricky. The French mind, you know. There, as a matter of fact, you can do everything. Except advertise by means of cars with posters on them or banners or such like because it would slow down the traffic. You can't quite see why or even how traffic could be impeded thereby, but the wise old books of the Paris Traffic Commission say it would, and you must take it that they know. But, as I said, you can still do lots of things, practically everything. You can mount a colossal Fred Astaire in a dancing pose on a truck and have him make the folks happy in the streets. You can do it. But, first, you have to convince several fast talking fellows that Fred won't tumble on the sidewalk and that his stick won't be dangerous to passers-by. Maybe you can manage that much. But then you have to convince them that the whole colossal figure will not fall apart and Fred's, let's say nose, will not hurt a peaceful citizen. And you not only have to tell them that nothing of the sort can happen, you have to prove it. And this is the point where you give up. But otherwise you can do any old thing and the streets of Paris are yours. Or almost yours—for a walk.

In Warsaw it's a pleasure. You can do anything as long as it attracts no attention. You are not nuts and you still think exploitation should attract attention and lots of it, but who are you to tell the fathers of the city of Warsaw? With all due respect to the law you look into a press-sheet and find that a walking top hat couldn't but please the Warsawers. Thereupon, an artist is shown in and a sketch made. The plans are submitted to the Building Commission or maybe the Children's Court, measurements are taken of the man who will be inside the hat, the paint you are going to use is tested, the guards are called and ready and finally, your idea is approved. You take the boys and treat them to some champagne and, on the morrow, why . . . two big top hats are actually walking the streets of Warsaw! Boy! You shake hands everywhere, you propose a rise for the local publicity man (which is turned down in due course), you send an enthused report to Headquarters, you are congratulated, buy a present for your girl and as soon as all this is done, the police arrest your "streetwalkers," top hats and everything, and you pay a fine for "attracting attention in public streets."

"Top Hat" Boys in Warsaw

Here comes the strange interlude and no joke, please: you may take off your top hat or any other hat you wish to the great and beautiful city of Copenhagen. There the streets really are yours. They are old and they are narrow, but they are prosperous, and you wonder if broadmindedness toward publicity stunts has anything to do with the fact. You can make "walking top hats," you can arrange band parades and you can stop all the traffic there is, and that's something! In the end, the pastry cook from across the street gets so enthused about your picture and your publicity that he makes some good looking and still better tasting chocolate top hats and sends them to you with his best wishes and no charges, and a cup of coffee to go with it!

And how about the big, brutal, bellowing press? As aforementioned Stockholm gets the prize for understanding and co-operation. In Turkey, they are less considerate. Anything that resembles a beauty contest and you're clapped in gaol—you white-slave dealer, you! In Budapest, they'll print everything and their headlines are prize beauties but you have to make sure how to secure the "local interest." You just put on your magician's coat, ignore facts and give them Ginger Rogers of Hungarian ancestry, Hepburn in love with a gipsy musician, and Charles Boyer born in Kiskunfélegyhaza which is to Budapest what Yonkers, N. Y., is to New York, only you can't pronounce it! So let's call it a day!

PUTTING OVER STARS REQUIRES MUCH WORK

The exhibition and publicity problems occasioned by the differences in the 28 countries under his jurisdiction and the fact that few of these countries are "exploitation-minded" requires a lot of thought and effort in selling the stars at the boxoffice, says Harry Leasim, Radio Pictures International, General Sales Manager for Continental Europe.

"While the demand for boxoffice names in Europe is as great as it is in America, the putting over of a star requires much more time and work than it does in America, because most of the European countries are not 'publicity-exploitation-minded.' RKO has done a lot of missionary work in this connection and more still remains to be done, but most spectacular results have been obtained in several countries during the last 12 months."

The countries in Mr. Leasim's territory are as follows: France, Greece, Holland, Turkey, Palestine, Germany, Latvia, Hungary, Denmark, Persia, Egypt, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Poland, Roumania, Iraq, Syria, Sweden, Esthonia, Norway, Belgium, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Jugoslavia, Lithuania and Finland.

Stresses Need of Coupling Sales With Publicity

by JOHN ARMSTRONG

Publicity Director, Radio Pictures Ltd.

How all too often the Publicity department is regarded as a necessary evil, something which supposedly is to be tolerated because everybody else has got one. By the average sales department (and accounts department!) the publicity boys are looked upon as a bunch of crazy, irresponsible guys, devoid of all ideas of business who spend a lot of money and never get any back. As for discussing sales problems with us—'mm—just a waste of time. How could the nitwits be expected to understand? Let 'em alone, and if they do shoot out an ad or two, or an occasional colored throw-away, or run a street parade of elephants, it cannot do much harm. And anyway, everybody else is doing it.

Sad, gentlemen, but you know all too well that this state of affairs does exist and that invariably the sales and publicity departments are poles apart.

But the sales and publicity here are as man and wife, so closely do they work together.

Advertisements and printed literature are not produced on the chance that the best points of a picture have been exploited in the interests of sales. We in publicity know from the start that the best angles have been incorporated for the sales appeal of the film in question has been analyzed beforehand with the sales department.

Then again, from this constant close contact with sales needs, we know what methods of approach to use and when to use them. Whether to appeal to the potential exhibitor through the medium of the trade press or by means of a mail campaign. It has even been made possible, through this sales and publicity unison, to specialize in sales promotion methods and to differentiate between the publicity approach to exhibitors in towns where it is known that certain stars are not particularly popular and that adopted towards exhibitors in areas where the appeal of the same stars are greater.

Yes, gentlemen, our sales and publicity departments are married all right. A happy and intelligent state of affairs—it spells "big business."

"TELL THE TRUTH IN SWEDEN"

Exploitation Angles Are Limited Due to the Restrictions Against Many Forms of Ballyhoo Selling

by CARL GERHARD WALLMAN

General Manager, RKO Radio Films, Sweden

In spite of our young status as a branch in the RKO Radio family of nations, events since our inauguration last January certainly warrant the fondest of expectations for the success of our pictures in Sweden.

My opening statement, to anyone acquainted with conditions in the Swedish market today, would at first sight seem rash, when you consider that most producers are distributing their films direct in this market and that, coupled with a season of only forty weeks and with a maximum of possibilities for outstanding pictures of not more than 300, the field is a most difficult one to compete with regardless of the native production of nearly forty films a year, which, by itself, constitutes the most serious factor. Our confidence in RKO Radio productions is unshakable and the success registered by "Top Hat" and several other pictures will bear us out.

The exploitation angles in Sweden are limited. First of all this is due to the fact that Sweden is a very conservative country and extremely difficult to impress by what is called in USA a "ballyhoo" and "gigantic selling" of a picture by the use of superlative expressions. The Swedes shy at any exaggeration and are extremely distrustful of any obtrusive publicity. Furthermore, you cannot really paint the town red with posters, etc., as Sweden has a beauty-council which forbids a landlord to sell any space of his housefront, etc., if the decoration is not up to what is considered as esthetic and ethical standard. The law also forbids the theatres and newspapers to start any prize contests enticing people to patronize a certain theatre or buy a certain newspaper. There also exists an ominous paragraph in the law, forbidding exhibitors to have any stage-show or any other special attraction in connection with a motion picture performance.

All these difficulties we had to face in regard to the exploitation of "Top Hat." After careful checking up all the rules and regulations, we still succeeded in doing something—and what we did is this:

First Time Gala Opening

For the very first time in Swedish film history we had a real gala opening, and on the invitation we bravely wrote: "Evening dress desirable." This stirred up everybody; 50 per cent of the people were strongly against going to such trouble just to see a movie, but we got the whole town talking and—everybody came. Now the opening of "Top Hat" under such circumstances was considered to be such a distinguished social event, that we got a special permit from the police to have an orchestra play the hit-tunes on the stage before the picture.

Two weeks in advance we announced our intention to have a number of "Top Hat" balls with prizes given away to couples chosen by a jury. This was also something quite novel and all the restaurants of Stockholm vied with each other to be the sponsors of such a ball.

100,000 of Fred Astaire's visiting cards were delivered in the homes of Stockholm. On the back of these cards was jotted down in handwriting: "I have called on you and Swedish custom requires you to repay my visit. I will meet you in 'Top Hat' every evening at the China Theatre." In all the big windows of the music shops we had wonderful displays featuring the song and dance music, enlargements from the picture, etc.

We succeeded with another contest, too. In connection with the Ginger Rogers picture, "In Person," we had twenty of the foremost hairdressers of Stockholm competing in making the best Ginger Rogers coiffure on beautiful young ladies. At an afternoon performance in the theatre the coiffures were shown and prizes awarded. No entrance fee was required, but a few small advance ads brought in a full house —in fact, the house was "sold out" in a few hours. And after that, the hairdressers of the town were kept busy twisting the blond, dark or red curls of hundreds of girls who wanted to capture some of Ginger Rogers' charm (see photo).

An effective advertising in the daily papers is one of the most important selling points. For every release we have tried to get something original and away from the beaten track.

Promotes Zoo For "Claw" Date

Bert Reisman, RKO home office representative in Cuba, discovered when he started exploitation for "Fang and Claw" there that of all things, Havana couldn't boast of a zoo. Then and there things started to happen. Bert got in touch with Frank Buck to contact the Playgrounds Department and negotiations were opened for a contemplated Municipal Zoo.

This display of civic enterprise, needless to say, was given prominent space in all dailies and the consequent publicity helped the picture no end.

Says High Power Advertising Aids Spain Campaigns

by ROBERTO TRILLO

Managing Director, Radio Films, S.A.E.

Disturbances may come and disturbances may go, but entertainment holds sway over the people's minds regardless of whether the locale is Bagdad, Indo-China or Spain. Each country enjoys their own particular type of entertainment and nothing deters the man who wants a few hours of relaxation.

Up to a comparatively short while back, bullfighting was the acme of amusement for the Spanish people—the arenas were filled to overflowing with enthusiastic spectators who paid their pesetas to sit in the bleachers and holler "bravos" to their favorite "matadores."

This same enthusiasm has been transferred today to the interior of darkened cinemas, where the same spectator still pays the same price of admission but this time, he roots for his favorite actor or actress.

My statement is substantiated by the fact that in the period of over two years since Radio Films, S. A. E., was organized, we have established offices in Madrid, Valencia, Sevilla, Bilbao and very recently, on May 29, Palma de Mallorca, and also to the fact that the Spanish cinemagoers have been educated to respond to American exploitation methods adapted to their own particular requirements.

States Specific Instances

"The Little Minister" is another picture in point. Katharine Hepburn's popularity was rather limited as she had only been seen so far in "Little Women," but knowing that the Spaniards go heavy for the gypsy stuff, we decided to give la Hepburn as much of a gypsy exploitation as possible. We played up the mysterious, the unfathomable and the spiritual angles and when the picture opened I was happy to see the efforts of our Publicity and Exploitation Departments, headed by Mr. J. Gallego, favorably reflected at the boxoffice. Our campaign on Becky Sharp is explained in the next column.

With "Top Hat," all we needed was to make a big picture still bigger. With the tremendous success that "Carioca" acquired as a musical number—its popularity going as far as to having a "grippe" epidemic called "Carioca," it was that catchy—our efforts were concentrated upon popularizing "El Piccolino" and I want to tell you that it was a knockout at the box office.

With the cooperation of Antonio Blanco and René Beja, Sales Manager and Assistant Sales Manager, respectively, we sell Radio pictures in groups with the best possible selection, according to the way the Spanish season runs, and judging from the enthusiasm and results shown so far, I can truly say that Radio Films, S. A. E., a one hundred per cent Spanish organization, rates second to none in prestige and efficiency as compared with other enterprises of much longer standing.

Barcelona Prominents Sponsor "Sharp" Premiere

Built up with an advance publicity campaign starting three months ahead, the climax of the drive on "Becky Sharp" at the Astoria Theatre, Barcelona, Spain, featured a special showing before the local "Circulo Artistico," leading society of painters, sculptors, writers, musicians, advises Robert Trillo, RKO Radio chief in Spain. Endorsements from these celebrities were used in the advertising to good effect during run of picture.

Five days ahead, top radio stations were employed to further spread the word, including a special program in which the cannonading sequence at Waterloo, taken from the trailer, was included. At the premiere, broadcast was made from lobby during which leading Barcelonans in attendance praised the picture. Most powerful station in Spain was used for this with much coverage obtained.

Arousing interest was a card carrying photo of Miriam Hopkins and picture copy, placed in plain envelope on which was printed "Para Ti, Mujer" ("For You, Madame"), distributed around town and house to house. Other cards were mailed to engineers, doctors, etc., and heralds given out at football games and downtown districts.

Egypt Responsive to Exploitation of Picture Dates

by DIMITRI RAISSI

Ideal Motion Pictures

Egypt, where more than 10 different languages are spoken, an utterly cosmopolitan country, is fertile territory for the exploitation of the talking pictures. Despite the difficulty encountered to find one language for a public composed of audiences of different nationalities, we are obtaining encouraging results, and even resounding successes.

Once we overcome the language barrier, our biggest enemy, we have noticed the favor with which spectators accept RKO films. Our principal publicity efforts consist of advertising the story of the film, well in advance of its premiere, as well as during its run.

Explains Advertising Approach

The advance publicity is done through the medium of publications wherein we insert explicatory articles, and pressing quite heavy upon the highlights. For really important films, we make up a "herald" profusely illustrated and edited in the languages of the different countries. These are distributed among the consulates and other governmental offices, which are the real bulk of moviegoers, as well as to schools, cafes, and other spots of a similar nature. Our efforts to make the picture thoroughly understandable even continue into the cinema itself, by having subtitles placed alongside those it already contains in Italian, Arabic, Greek, etcetera.

By our experience, we would say that the films which are apt to find the most favor with the public are those of very much action, and which are very spectacular—i.e., "She," "Last Days of Pompeii," and "King Kong"; also those of a novel nature with hairraising themes—such as "Bring 'Em Back Alive," "Bird of Paradise." In other words, all those pictures which present something different to the ordinary run of movies such as "Carioca," "Gay Divorcee" because of their original dance routines and different music.

Contend with Different Languages

The Egyptian people have as varied taste as the languages which compose this aggregation. It is therefore quite difficult to define a strict formula of what a picture would consist that would satisfy them utterly. The films we cite above give a rather rounded idea of this. Another point which is worthy of stressing is that aside of liking a spectacular production, it must be understood. Therefore we give particular attention to this in our publicity campaigns.

Now comes another enemy of motion picture exploitation—and that is the censor. Egyptian censors, however, are quite lenient. But they only look out for question of politics and morals, and the adherence to this is necessary for the successful exploitation of motion pictures in Egypt.

Window Displays Now Accepted by Indian Merchants

by REGINALD ARMOUR

Far Eastern General Manager, RKO Radio

Exploitation in India is strictly limited owing to municipal, police and governmental regulations. Marquees, lobby or street displays as we know them in America are tabu. American advertising copy is not understood and most of it has to be rewritten to suit local requirements. RKO Radio publishes each month a magazine for exhibitors called "Flash." It is the only periodical of its kind in the territory and has the signal honor of being read from cover to cover by most exhibitors. It is printed in English and two dialects—Hindi and Urdu. Despite red tape RKO Radio have by patient, persistent perseverance overcome resistance to its advertising efforts. For instance by securing the permission of five authorities RKO managed to have an illuminated "Top Hat" sign with letters seven feet high strung across the Chowringhee—Calcutta's Times Square section.

RKO Radio has made Indian shopkeepers "movie minded." RKO Radio window displays, planned by an artistic window dresser, are one of RKO Radio's most appreciated picture selling helps. RKO operates its own theatre in Calcutta—the RKO Elphinstone. The company's product appeals alike to both Indian and European patrons. For instance Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire are as big a hit in Delhi as they are in Detroit.

Advance Campaign On Pons Started 16 Weeks Ahead

by RALPH R. DOYLE

Managing Director, RKO Radio, Australia and New Zealand

RKO distribution in Australia closely follows the domestic plan that operates so successfully in the United States. The head office of the Australasian distributing organization is situated in Sydney and is departmentalized in such manner as to give maximum service to the six branches located in the main city in each of the Australian states and in Wellington, New Zealand. Great distances lie between branches, the furthest from headquarters being Perth—2,300 miles away. The main head office executives consist of the Managing Director, General Sales Manager, Director of Publicity, and Controller or Secretary, as he is called. Duties are carefully allocated to avoid overlapping, but coordination is secured by medium of a weekly executive meeting. Particular attention is given to exploitation activities, a phase of the general operation scheme that is most important in Australia.

Distributor Puts Over Advance

First run theatres as a rule work to a hard and fast publicity allocation, and if a big picture is to be adequately launched on its career the distributing organization has to do all the preliminary work. This pre-release publicity and exploitation campaign starts as early as three months prior to the date set for first release, the latter by the way, always taking place in Sydney. In the case of Lily Pons' first picture, "I Dream Too Much," the exchange publicity campaign to launch this new star commenced sixteen weeks ahead of first run.

We follow two guiding principles in deciding on the amount of cash to be spent on a big picture by way of preliminary advertising, the first being that the bigger the picture the more noise should be made about it, and the second, that the public can't be fooled by big publicity into accepting a mediocre attraction as a big one. The Australian public has an uncanny knack of smelling out the "big ones" and it is just pouring money down a sink to do an "A" campaign on an "ordinary."

Because our theatres generally have large capacities, however, a smashing campaign on a sure fire hit pays dividends by increasing the pressure of business during at least the first two weeks on a picture like "Top Hat" or "Follow the Fleet" to capacity business for each of the four sessions daily. "Top Hat," incidentally, ran for six weeks, four sessions a day, at Sydney's State Theatre—capacity, 2,700 seats.

Special exploitation is not only confined to pictures playing extended runs, as when a weekly change picture with certain special features in it comes along it is possible to boost business at our weekly change first release house, "The Capitol," to such an extent that provides a satisfactory investment plus making the picture concerned more valuable to the subsequent run situations.

Panama Exploitation Is Two-Sided

In the Canal Zone of Panama, no exploitation is needed, says F. S. Gulbransen, Radio Pictures Panama head, this due to the Army motion picture service and Bureau of Playgrounds catering to civilian employees and military personnel, both having well-organized circuits with a definite attendance. Plugging, however, is called for when the picture is released to the general public through the Barrios circuit.

All material prepared for local use by A. R. Irigoyen, publicity director, is circulated in the various countries serviced by the Panama branch. Theatre fronts throughout the territory are standouts, with excellent displays, for instance, from Guatemala by Maximo Stahl & Cia at the Capitol, reproductions of which have been run in the Round Table.

Gulbransen reports a recent contest on "Roberta" as very successful, wherein prizes were offered for those writing the title most times legibly within a specified space. Over 27,000 "Robertas" were turned in by the winner. Announcements from airplanes and sky-writing have also been tried recently.

Strong Sydney Campaign For Lily Pons Film Debut

Plenty of coverage was obtained for the premiere of Lily Pons in "I Dream Too Much"—her film debut in Australia—by Ralph Doyle, managing director, State Theatre, Sydney, and special exploiteer Frank Mussared, who was successful in landing many sponsored broadcasts on different stations. "Chatter" programs were featured by some of the Pons records of the song hits.

"Follow the Fleet" Sections Carried by Shanghai Papers

For the first time in the history of Chinese journalism, according to Leon Britton of Peacock Motion Picture Company, the influential dailies of Shanghai, "The Shanghai Evening Post and Mercury" and "The China Press" carried a two and four-page spread respectively, the latter in rotogravure featuring the sensational musical "Follow the Fleet."

Advertisers took full advantage of the opportunity offered them by these newspapers to play up their merchandise and bring it to the attention of the several thousand sailors from the U. S. Asiatic Fleet and the British China Fleet, whose arrival in Shanghai prompted the management to advance the opening of "Fleet" to make it coincide with the sailors' leave.

Ties Palestine Short To Havana Hebrews

Cooperation of the leaders and organizations in the Havana Jewish colony was obtained by Padro Saenz and Bert Reisman, working with Manager Heliodoro Garcia, to publicize the Palestine sequence in recent "March of Time" issue, shown at the Nacional Theatre. Leading rabbi lectured on this and further endorsements were secured from other leaders.

Special preview for benefit of Hebrew organization was also put on, campaign included house to house canvass, circularization and liberal posting.

Ace Exploitation Features Dates In Mexico City

by LUIS LEZAMA

Manager, Radio Pictures de Mexico, S. A.

Mexico City is the headquarters for all major distributing companies and the entire country of Mexico is serviced from this center. Most of the distributing companies are located in the downtown or business section.

Mexico City and the larger cities of the country have many modern first-class theatres. The majority of these are the larger first-run theatres although there have recently been constructed many new theatres of lesser importance. In Mexico City the most recent deluxe house is the Cine Alameda which has since its opening been playing pre-release runs of the biggest pictures. Other leading first-run theatres in Mexico City are the Palacio, the Regis and the Balmori.

The theatres in the Federal District combine into circuits. These circuits are made up of several theatres, usually with individual owners who arrange their contracts with the various distributing companies. One of the leading theatres of the circuit plays a picture first run usually for a week, sometimes longer on big pictures. After a brief protection period the same pictures are then run in the balance of the circuit.

Extensive Campaigns Created

Both the national distributors and the theatres carry on extensive campaigns, the most important of which are done by newspaper advertising. The newspapers in Mexico very often have two whole pages devoted entirely to advertisements of the current attractions at the leading theatres. Some of these ads often occupy half of the page. Booklets, pamphlets, heralds, etcetera, are used in large quantities and when appropriate novelties and other forms of ticket-buying inducements are used. Numerous tie-ups are arranged with stores and merchants throughout the city. Street ballyhoo in the form of living characters, floats, street parades, etcetera, are widely used on the big pictures.

Ed.: Mr. Lezama also forwards photo of stage presentation (see photo) put on at the Alameda Theatre, in Mexico City, in conjunction with the showing of "Fleet."

LOS ANGELES RAVED! LAST WEEK at this Great Show from Loew's State & Chinese

Tucker Puts On Special Kid Show

Highlighting his "Modern Times" campaign at the Park Theatre, Roselle Park, N. J., with a goodwill gesture, John Tucker addressed the Rotary Club there inviting each member to bring a poor child to see the picture as guest of the management.

For street bally young man dressed as Chaplin distributed calling cards and two girls carried imprinted banner, one dressed in modern attire and the other in old-fashioned clothes. In lobby an old pair of shoes were planted in case with copy reading "These million dollar shoes are like Chaplin's in" etc. Accompanying photo shows how Tucker treated his traveler. Word contest was staged with tickets going to those turning in largest number of small words from title.

Securing cooperation of local police, all radio car tire covers were imprinted as were public service busses. Special box office was erected in lobby two weeks ahead for ticket sale, ushers carrying "strike" placards paraded in front of theatre, copy reading "we can't work, the laughs are killing us" etc.

Entire front was changed with large cutouts of the star and easel was planted at entrance with various size buttons, "lost button owners" were invited to claim same, lost during laugh scenes.

Krendel Challenges Typists On "Modern Times" Contest

Novelty dodgers were distributed by Dan Krendel, Tivoli, Toronto for "Modern Times" to business colleges, high school commercial classes and office buildings. Card contained figure of Chaplin done entirely on the typewriter and stenogs were challenged to copy it. To the first 20 turning in neatnest and nearest likenesses tickets were awarded.

Tieup was arranged with local dairy to install bar in lobby (see photo) at which free malted milks were dispensed. Fur company used ad with "follow the stars in fur fashions" copy and cut of Paulette Goddard, as did department store featuring millinery. Stores used attractive stills of Miss Goddard for display purposes and men's haberdasher window with large portrait of Chaplin wearing derby and copy "be smart in a new spring hat." Full window of hardware store was devoted to roller skates tying in the skating episode in picture.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Chaplin Visit to Shanghai Tied to "Times" Opening

Long queues, outmoded on modern Chinese heads, became a commonplace at Chinese theatres in Shanghai recently for "Modern Times." Campaign, arranged under the management of Alexander Krisel, began a month before opening, concurrently with the visit of Chaplin to the city during a tour of the Orient. Interveiws with the star, biographies and special features got big space in newspapers.

A precedent was broken when tickets were placed on sale a week before opening.

New also to this city was the broadcast arrangement staged during the gala activities at the opening performance. Station XQHE installed a microphone in the lobby of the Nanking. Announcer introduced arriving celebrities and recited comments on the picture gleaned from the press previews of the New York, Hollywood and London premieres. The broadcast lasted thirty minutes and was also given on four consecutive nights during the run.

Tieup was effected with one of the largest shoe store chains for Chaplin cutout in the windows with generous plugs.

L. H. Belber, Savar Theatre, Camden, N. J., high-lighted his "Love Before Breakfast campaign with attractive girl and auto bally plugging the comedy fight angle. Local Carole Lombard blonde rode around in new roadster exhibiting blackened eye. Banner on car (see photo) read "see the battle of the century." Car was promoted from local sales agency in exchange for credit sign.

Dairy Cooperates On "Fauntleroy"

A 1,250-line dairy ad with the copy "Little Lord Fauntleroy sets a good example—Freddie Bartholomew replaces energy by drinking milk" and a large cut of star with credit lines for picture and theatre was one of the promotions in the campaign staged by Chick Evens and Jimmy Harris, Loew's Theatre, St. Louis.

Three column ad featuring "the feminine mode influenced by Fauntleroy boy fashions" etc. using picture of Freddie with full billing, was run by one of the leading department stores. In addition, the store bought considerable space for a Bartholomew suits ad.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Brown Hooks Theatres To Ad Writing Contest

Annual contest sponsored by Boston Herald and Traveler wherein readers are invited to write original ads for any of the cooperating merchants was tied in to the M & P downtown Boston theatres, publicized by Harry Brown, Jr., and reported by John P. McConville. Companies representing every important line of endeavor are included, with generous cash and merchandise prizes given, and the paper going for it with pages and pages of publicity and photos of prize winners.

Brown did a lot of work in getting much out of it for the theatres, promoting thousands of heralds for general distribution, obtaining many newspaper breaks and having presentation of the major prizes made from the stages of the various theatres. Street stunts included parade of prize auto into the theatre.

Contest ran for weeks and Brown reports that theatres profited as they were included in all the major arrangements and mentioned daily in the newspaper and other publicity.

"Have You Contributed Lately?"

Jones Uses Couple For "Things" Bally

Accompanying photo shows street stunt arranged by Ray Jones, manager of the Majestic Theatre in Houston, and Bob Kelley, press agent, for their campaign on "Things to Come." Three days in advance and during run the couple paraded through streets of Houston. The man carried back placard reading "The well-dressed man and woman of the future," giving complete billing and playdate.

The pair visited cafes, hotels, department stores, grade schools, rode street cars, buses, taxis and even hitch-hiked rides. Police stopped them at all downtown corners for their permit and this never failed to collect a huge crowd.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut towards such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features now in work or completed for release later than the date of this issue are listed under "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the companies. Asterisk indicates running time as made known by West Coast studio before announcement by home office in New York. Variations also may be due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1935, unless otherwise specified. Letter in parenthesis after title denotes audience classification of production: (A) Adult, (G) General. Numerals following audience classification are production numbers. Dagger symbol indicates picture is of the 1935-36 season.

"A SHORT SUBJECT THAT DESERVES BOOKING IN EVERY THEATRE THROUGHOUT AMERICA"*

The thrilling story of the writing of 'The Star Spangled Banner' gorgeously produced in

TECHNICOLOR

"THE SONG OF A NATION"

. . . Perfect for all patriotic holidays— but super-perfect for the 4th of July!

FILM DAILY SAID IT —and a whole lot more! Here's every syllable of the grandest words ever written in praise of a short subject-

> ### Magnificent
> Both on merit and theme, this short subject deserves booking in every theater throughout America. Warners have put into its production the same supreme care that is found in top-flight features. This two-reel picture in Technicolor depicts magnificently, tastefully and with striking emotional effect the circumstances under which Francis Scott Key composed "The Star Spangled Banner." A vital and vitalizing film that packs power and audience appeal.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 123, No. 12

BRITAIN'S PIONEER

A CERTAIN sector of the British press, and conspicuously the Era, a London amusement publication, is continuously engaged in the endeavor to make England the homeland of motion picture invention and often as maybe to fling animadversions at the historical findings of the editor of Motion Picture Herald. With rare industry and curious persistence the inconsistent, undocumented, and unanalyzed claims of persons equipped with rampant fancy and retroactive memories are quoted and cited with the finality typical of the prejudiced and the uninformed.

This is the more remarkable in that there is readily available in London a scientific and expert gentleman who was a pioneering participant of real note in the dawn years of the art—Mr. Robert W. Paul.

But Mr. Paul's veracious accounts and records would be most unsatisfactory to those writing patriots who do Britain disservice by the purveying of shallow fictions. For it chances that Mr. Paul's very considerable contributions, and his very real British priorities, were as he relates based upon the mechanisms taken to London from West Orange, New Jersey.

It was, incidentally, Mr. Paul who supplied motion picture equipment to M. George Melies, magician at the Theatre Robert Houdin in Paris. And it was M. Melies in turn who explored for the art capacities of the camera in all manner of manipulation with stop motion, overlapping dissolves, fade-outs and the like. Melies pictures imported in the early years inspired, instructed and spurred American cameramen contributing importantly to the founding of the mastery of the Hollywood technique to which the studios of the world turn today.

That and related matters would give our contentious British contemporary something real to discuss, but that would also require more labor and research than is involved in printing the letters and mouthings of myth makers.

While Mr. Paul has enjoyed scant attention in London, his work is well known in America and as will be set forth presently, he is in for further recognition on this side.

ACHIEVEMENT

ONLY the more thoughtful observers of the screen and its evolutionary processes can be fully aware of the sterling adventure quality of that flow of production which has brought in a short space of time from one studio such a sequence of achievements as "A Midsummer Night's Dream," "The Story of Louis Pasteur," "The Green Pastures" and now "The White Angel."

There has been, to be sure, ever a certain exploratory quality pervading the efforts of the Brothers Warner. Without dwelling on the very large expression of that flair in the bringing forth of sound, some more remote evidences come to mind, as for instance, "My Four Years in Germany," and also the spectacular quality of unanticipated success in "School Days."

While the sophomoric critics of the screen yearn for what they call "adult" film fare and go yapping after the inept cinema mannerisms of this and that red, pink, or yellow "genius," consistently sound development of the art comes, inevitably from what they call Hollywood, but which must emphatically include Burbank.

Most interesting of the manifestations on the Warner lot is the proof that outstanding effort expertly addressed at extraordinary production goes along regularly immediately alongside the less pretentious production lines demanded by the volume consumption of the theatres.

The same administrative machinery, and substantially the same creative mechanisms, deliver both lines of product. And, granting that the Warner staff does include many specialists of unusual competence, there is no indication that it enjoys any greater access to the talent pools of Hollywood than other organizations. There is therefore indication that basic administrative attentions, from selection of material to final fabrication, can, and in this instance does, determine both the character and quality of the resultant pictures.

Motion picture folk like to talk much about "the breaks" and to place large responsibility on Lady Luck, if she is a lady. But what has been wrought in the array of pictures named is not the product of chance. Luck has no such skill.

THE opposition of Mr. Roy Roberts of the Kansas City Star to the proposal to nominate Governor Bridges as a running mate for the Son of Kansas, lest the Democrats should sweep the country with "Landon Bridges falling down," reminds one of the alarm in the Mutual Film Corporation of 1914 when it was discovered that exhibitors were talking about the serial of the day as "The Million Dollar Misery." The serial, however, made just 700 per cent. That still leaves one unconvinced that Paramount started right with a volcano for a trade mark.

OF course, barristers, solicitors and even lawyers cannot advertise for business. Also the pursuit of ambulances is not considered the best practice. Therefore one must instantly dismiss any notion that it would be possible that Mr. Russell Hardy went to the Allied convention in Cleveland looking for business for the attorney general's office.

This Week

Story Record

Hollywood broke all records in creating a new source of story material with the wholesale purchase of 327 originals, books, plays and magazine manuscripts, investing at least $1,635,000, and assigning most of the new acquisitions to 1936-37 programs.

The relation of the purchases to previous similar transactions is treated in the article starting on page 12, together with a record of the titles, with available production credits.

Half and Half

Commencing in 1937, Korean exhibitors will have to give more than half of their screen time to Japanese product. Present requirements are for one-third. Exhibitors, distributors and Korean motion picture patrons are seeing what can be done about it.

Correspondent Chikushi Tani's account of this and other developments is published on page 82.

Politics

Last week Pennsylvania's Republican Senator Davis was assured action at the next session of Congress on his sidetracked resolution to investigate expenditures of governmental emergency agencies, notably the WPA. Senator Davis and others are apprehensive lest the WPA circulate during the pre-election campaign New Deal propaganda in newsreel form. Meanwhile, other agencies have been releasing pictures, promptly labeled "trial balloons" by administration opponents.

A survey of the developments to date is published on page 18.

More Aggression

Despite Erpi's cut in rates, RCA continues its invasion of the major studios, and this week added Warner Brothers, Erpi's first customer, to the list of companies for which it will provide sound recording. Meanwhile, indications point to a "war" for dominance.

Developments are related on page 59.

Double Taxation

Under a two-way agreement on double taxation, American film companies fear they virtually will be subjected to the jurisdiction of the French Government, but nevertheless are accepting the regulations, which are optional. It has to do with the tax on business and industrial profits in France.

For particulars, and for text of the Franco-American pact, see page 93.

Small Town Copy

Advertising copy attuned to the needs of the small town exhibitor and campaigns to promote new faces among film players were the subjects of pleas made by Ed Kuykendall and Al Lichtman on the occasion of the presentation of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers annual awards.

See page 72.

Universal Color

A new color process which uses one negative and multiple lenses, and is said to solve the time and cost problem in color photography, is being tested by Universal, which reports the development as "very promising."

For particulars, see page 96.

The Young Idea

Young people's attitude toward motion pictures, their habits of theatre attendance and their opinions with relation to the probable effect of what they see, upon themselves and others, are subjects of a subcommittee's report to the Youth Committee delegated under the Survey of Human Needs of New Canaan, Conn. The screen gave very good account of itself, according to the subcommittee's summary of observations and recommendations.

Facts, figures and trends turned up by the investigators are presented in the story on page 83.

Intervention

Australian exhibitors, through their association, have invited governmental intervention in the affairs of the industry, especially as pertains to exchange-sponsored theatre building. A set of resolutions has been drawn up. A preliminary parley failed to mend differences.

Exhibitors' resolutions are included in a general discussion of the Australian situation presented on page 100.

Uncle Sam, Producer

Uncle Sam rises as leading stage producer, as Broadway goes on its summer vacation. The beginnings of a 10-theatre vaudeville circuit in New York, free open air shows playing to thousands, touring of successful WPA legitimate attractions, all are part of the current federal theatre activity—competition to the motion picture theatres.

British Exhibitors Meet

Complaints of intimidation by distributors and threats of construction of opposition theatres to enforce company demands were before theatremen of Great Britain as final preparations were rushed for the annual Summer Conference of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Associated, opening at Eastbourne on Monday, June 22d.

A discussion of problems before the Conference appears on page 103.

Precarious

Evidence is piling up that the position of the American industry in Germany is becoming increasingly precarious and its future extremely uncertain. Seven American films were banned by the Nazi censors in the last few days, and "The Country Doctor" was rejected on the ground that Jean Hersholt is of Jewish ancestry.

What is happening in Germany is related on page 102.

Paramount Elects

At their annual meeting in New York on Tuesday stockholders of Paramount elected five new members to the board of directors, three of them men of experience in the motion picture industry. The meeting was enlivened frequently by insistent questioning of officers as to the status of President John E. Otterson, the nature of the report on company affairs recently submitted by Joseph P. Kennedy and related matters.

Names of the new directors and an account of the meeting are published on page 63. Exclusive pictures on page 62.

IATSE Plans

Delegates returned to their homes this week from the IATSE convention in Kansas City with a new insight into affairs of the motion picture's biggest union, learning, principally, that the organization at once will conduct a movement to unionize some 9,000 non-union theatres in America, and that a new constitution and bylaws will be used to keep squabbles of the individual locals out of the courts.

The convention brought many developments of importance, at least to unionism in exhibition. These are related starting on page 79.

Historical

Taking up where the story of "Henry VIII" left off, "Nine Days a Queen" continues on the screen the historical record of the colorful Tudor period of English history with Cedric Hardwicke as the Earl of Warwick and Nova Pilbeam as the queen.

Scenes from the picture and a story by Bruce Allan in London appear on pages 10-11.

"Law Abiding"

The superior court in the state of Washington this week declared the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to be law abiding, not violative of the state laws or of the Constitution, in dismissing an anti-trust action pending against the Society, vacating a receivership. Other harassments face ASCAP, however.

For this and other developments in the field of film music, see page 72.

Succession

Morris Leonard has been appointed successor to veteran Jack Miller as head of the Chicago Exhibitors Association and will take over leadership of the organization, one of the oldest in the country, July 1st. Mr. Leonard is and will continue to be legal and real estate counsel for Balaban & Katz.

Bill Crouch describes the organization's position and prospects on page 114.

Harmony in Principle

Following meetings with representatives of GB Pictures, Twentieth Century-Fox and United Artists last week, exhibitor leaders seeking revision of trade practices announced that practically all major companies are in agreement, in principle, with the views expressed in proposals presented by the exhibitor committee.

A complete summarization of the situation is published on page 104.

Quigley Awards

That the Quigley Awards for outstanding exploitation of motion pictures are recognized by the public internationally as a signal honor for specialized achievement was the keynote of the address by Governor Clyde Tingley of New Mexico in presenting the Bronze Plaque to Russell Hardwick of the Lyceum theatre at Clovis last week. Governor Tingley made a 120-mile special trip to Clovis for the occasion.

Governor Tingley's words and Mr. Hardwick's reply are recorded on page 101.

42 from "U"

Delegates to the Universal sales convention at the Hotel Astor, New York, were told on Tuesday that the company will release 42 features and four serials on its 1936-37 program. President R. H. Cochrane addressed the convention in the opening session, emphasizing "complete harmony and understanding between the studio and the sales department." James R. Grainger, general sales manager, presided.

The convention is reported in story and picture on page 96.

Prediction

Board chairman Joseph M. Schenck uttered pessimistic predictions pertaining to British production practice at his office in Hollywood last week. Exempting the English film executives whose interests are aligned with those of Twentieth Century-Fox, Mr. Schenck described others, tempted by ready availability of finances, as in the act of duplicating production and administration errors committed in Hollywood during boom days.

Mr. Schenck's exact phraseology is reported on page 73.

Vienna Volunteers

Artistic and civic Viennese have established the Austrian Society of Friends of the Motion Picture with a view toward showing members films not generally exhibited in Austrian cinemas, discussing motion picture problems and developments.

From Vienna comes Dr. Adolph Nichtenhauser's story of the organization's inception and intentions, on page 64.

Denunciation

Bank Night "not only feeds the craze for gambling, but tends to the use of cheap features instead of the more desirable pictures," according to the executive committe of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, in convention in New York this week. Two mountain ranges to the west, the first annual convention of Bank Night distributors went into session at Denver, Colo. The church organization represents 23 religious denominations with 22,000,000 communicants. Bank Night executives claim 4,000 theatres.

For details, see page 87.

Television "Bridle"

The Government this week took a hand in the problem of television when technicians and manufacturers met with members of the Federal Communications Commission on allocation of frequencies. The commission was told that the public already has invested three billions in receiving sets. There were also verbal explosions against RCA from independents' counsel.

Details of developments are recorded starting on page 90.

First Year

Following conferences with independent producers in Hollywood, President Edward L. Apperson of Grand National announced a minimum of thirty features, with a possible ceiling of fifty-two, for the first year's program of the newly formed company. A series of regional sales conventions will start next month with Carl Lesserman, general sales manager, in charge.

Additional information relevant to the organization's activities appears on page 97.

Cameras Whir

Production, lately lagging, spurted last week with Hollywood studios placing ten new pictures before the cameras. In the same week seven were completed. Passing of the sales convention season is regarded as accountable for the increased activity.

Gus McCarthy purveys complete information pertaining to the pictures started and finished in "The Hollywood Scene" section of this issue, page 73.

Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO-Radio, announced 54 features and 192 short subjects for the company's 1936-37 schedule at the sales convention held this week at the Hotel Waldorf Astoria in New York. Convention attendance was reported in excess of 350.

The convention is reported in story and picture on page 99.

REENACT HISTORY

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

HISTORY HAD ESTABLISHED quite a reputation for repeating itself long before the coming of the camera. It has improved its record since. Production cycles come and go, trends taper off and vogues vanish, but the pages of the past consistently provide, year after year, a steady flow of substantial screen material, most of it box office in the soundest sense of the term. Laid end to end chronologically the successful motion pictures based on historical fact might make up a pretty comprehensive record of this thing we call civilization—an engaging if impractical prospect—and in such an alignment the first scene of "Nine Days a Queen" would be spliced to the last scene of "Henry VIII." A bit of montage substituting Frank Cellier for Charles Laughton in the royal deathbed scene, with which one picture ends and the other begins, would take care of the technical aspect nicely.

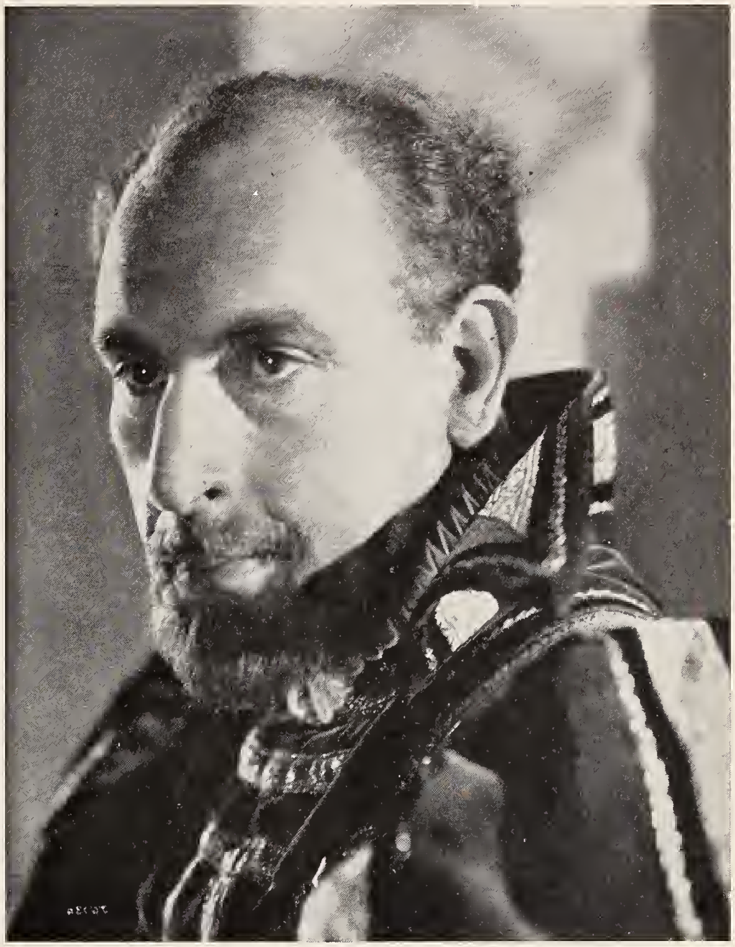
"Nine Days a Queen" is a Gaumont-British production dealing with the England that Henry VIII left behind him with detailed instructions as to who should govern it in his stead. The Earl of Warwick was not among the four named by the dying monarch in order of succession, but his efforts to correct that circumstance accounted for the historical incidents portrayed in the picture. Warwick, dubbed "King Maker" for his enterprise in that direction, is played by Cedric Hardwicke, lately seen impressively in "Les Miserables" and "Things to Come." Distinguished for his delineation of mannerly malevolence, the Warwick role fits him like his doublet and hose.

The young lady whose brief and tragic tenancy of the throne affords the picture its title was Lady Jane Grey, whose fate has been celebrated in novel and song almost since the executioner's blade marked the coming of the tenth day. The character is assigned to Nova Pilbeam, recently featured in "Little Friend" and "The Man Who Knew Too Much," who is costarred with Mr. Hardwicke in this production. Others in the cast are John Mills, Felix Alymer, Sybil Thorndyke, Frank Cellier, Desmond Tester, Gwen Francon Davies, Martita Hunt, Miles Malleson and Leslie Perrins.

Robert Stevenson, director of "Little Friend," directed "Nine Days a Queen," for the story of which, being history, the producers considerately decline to name an author. Dialogue is by Miles Malleson, unafraid to go on the set and speak his own, and T. Heslewood acted as period advisor with the results shown pictorially herewith. Art direction is by A. Vetchinsky.

The story is motivated by Warwick's ambition, which drives him to extreme lengths. He conspires to force Lady Jane Grey, fourth in succession to the throne, to marry his son. The young people, ultimately, pay with their lives for Warwick's momentary and evanescent triumph.

IN "NINE DAYS A QUEEN"



HOLLYWOOD RAIDS STORY MART FOR 327 MANUSCRIPTS

36 Producers Shatter Records in Wholesale Buying Spree; Take 22 Plays, 102 Published Works and 193 Originals

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM

Unprecedented story-buying activity conducted by the producers of Hollywood developed in the past few weeks the largest single new source of supply ever opened at one time, bringing to the studios 327 manuscripts from which to select material for the motion picture screens of the world.

The average monthly story-purchase prevailing heretofore was 63 and was dwarfed in comparison to the 170 manuscripts purchased in May and 157 in April. The nearest approach occurred in April, 1935, when the purchase of an even 100 stories was negotiated by all companies.

Hollywood's biggest raid on record on the stage of Broadway, the book publishers, magazine availabilities and the outside vaults holding desirable original manuscripts is explained by the keen competition which this year has marked the construction of new feature programs at the pre-seasonal period.

Prices paid for the plots ranged as high as $50,000. Taking the arbitrary estimate of only $5,000 expended on each deal, the 327 purchases represent an investment of at least $1,635,000. This figure in all likelihood would exceed $2,000,000 if the true prices were known.

The new purchases are for the most part intended (a) To fulfill the few remaining commitments still to be made on the present 1935-36 feature programs; and, (b) To form the backbone of 1936-37 programs, as presently being announced.

The stage of Broadway is growing less important to Hollywood as a source of story supply, Hollywood taking only 10 plays in May and 12 in April, whereas the original story—86 purchased in May and 107 in April—continues to build as the chief source, comparing as follows:

Purchases in May	Originals	Magazine Stories	Books	Plays	Total
Totals	86	19	55	10	170
Percentage.	51%	11%	32%	6%	100%

Purchases in April	Originals	Magazine Stories	Books	Plays	Total
Totals	107	13	25	12	157
Percentage.	68%	8%	16%	8%	100%

The April and May purchases of 107 and 86 originals, respectively, compares with the previous monthly average of 31 originals; the April and May purchases of 13 and 19 magazine stories, respectively, compares with the previous monthly average of six; the April and May purchases of 25 and 55 books, respectively, compares with the previous monthly average of 33 books, while the April and May purchases of 12 and 10 plays, respectively, compares with the previous monthly average of seven plays bought. And with Hollywood nurturing a "mad" at Broadway over the new dramatists' pact, the tendency to look to Broadway as a story source for Hollywood is expected to lessen.

Paramount participated more actively in the April-May story buying than any other company ever recorded, taking some 66 manuscripts, buying 25 of the "Elsie Dinsmore" stories in one clip, to be used in the new season and for several seasons thereafter. Radio bought 34 in April and May; MGM, 33; Columbia, 32; Warners, 32; Twentieth Century-Fox, 16; Universal, 15; the independent Leichter Productions, 14; FitzPatrick Pictures, 12, and Republic, 10. The remaining acquisitions were spread over some 26 independent producers.

Some of the best books, plays and originals to be made available in years, insofar as potential box office material is involved, were taken in the heavy April-May buying activity, as witness their appearance in the complete record below.

Manuscripts Bought in April

Titles of the 157 original stories, magazine yarns, books and plays bought by Hollywood producers during April, principally for 1936-37 production, together with all available filming credits, are as follows:

Purchase of 170 Pieces in One Month Compares with 63 Previous Average; Original Stories Lead Acquisitions

Ah, Miss Keane, magazine story, by Grace Sartwell Mason, purchased by Paramount, for Virginia Weidler and Billy Lee; production by A. M. Botsford.

Air Minded, original, by Eddie Moran, purchased by Radio; screen play by Eddie Moran.

And Sudden Death, book and magazine article (title purchased only), taken by Paramount, for Frances Drake, Randolph Scott and Charles Quigley. Title is tentative.

As Good as Married, original, by Norman Krasna and Eddie Buzzell, purchased by Universal; production and direction by Lynn Starling; screen play by Mr. Buzzell and Mr. Starling.

Assassins, original (known as "Flirting with Fate," as a silent production), purchased by Radio, for Joe Penner and "Parkyakarkas."

Auld Lang Syne, original, purchased by FitzPatrick Pictures.

Bard of Avon, original, based on the life of Shakespeare, purchased by FitzPatrick Pictures.

Behold the Bridegroom, play, by George Kelly, purchased by Radio, for Herbert Marshall and Barbara Stanwyck; production by Robert Sisk.

COOPERATE, BUT NOT MERGE, SAYS WHITNEY

John Hay Whitney, president of Pioneer Pictures, said this week following reports of a merger of Pioneer with Selznick International, that as far as he was concerned the two companies would cooperate with each other to their fullest extent but would not merge. Mr. Whitney is now in Hollywood to evolve a plan for closer physical coordination between the companies. The objective would be an interchange of story properties and personnel with the holdings of each so distributed as to work for the common welfare of each.

Since the individuality of each organization is to be retained, a mutual agreement is to be proposed whereby stories owned by either company will be produced by the one best equipped to handle the production.

MYSTERY IN AUSTRIAN CLAIMS ON PRODUCTION

The mystery of the week revolved around promises which Dr. Eugen Lanske, head of the motion picture division of the Austrian department of commerce, said had been made to him that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox would make two pictures each in Austrian-owned studios in Vienna next season.

New York home offices of both companies this week denied that such promises had been given, or, furthermore, that any negotiations to that end are underway. One of the companies described the story as given out by "the Will Hays of Austria" before sailing for home recently, as "a pipe dream." The other more conservatively termed the statement as a wish father to the thought.

A third executive expressed his belief that someone in Hollywood "had shown the doctor a good time."

Convention Hall Made Hollywood Set as Cameras Go into Action

Overlooking the massed standards of the 48 states and territories, newsreel crews are shown in action at the Republican national convention in Cleveland last week. Among the cameras are, from left: Addison Tice, Fox Movietone; James Sedivy, Universal; Al Gold, Fox; George Graham, Universal; Wayman Robertson, Paramount; James Lyons, Universal; Ralph Saunders, Pathe; Anthony Caputo, Pathe; James McKeon, Hearst Metrotone; U. Whipple, Hearst; Lou Hutt, John Hermann, Walter Swenson, W. P. Montague, Jr., all Paramount. The man leaning over the third camera is Gene Boyd, Hearst, and the man on the rail behind fourth camera is Arthur DeTitta, Fox.

The same battery is now primed for the Democratic "show," which gets under way in Philadelphia next Tuesday.

Newsreel representatives spoke over the Columbia radio network for a half hour prior to the Republican session to give the "unseen audience" a preview of the backstage scenes in their convention coverage.

Listeners were told that motion picture equipment valued at $300,000 transformed convention hall into a Hollywood set, that the five newsreels had approximately 100 men at hand, that newsreel coverage arrangements surpassed those of all previous years, and that an estimated 100,000,000 persons would see the convention pictures in the country's theatres.

Warner Home Office Is Closed for Boat Ride

The annual boatride and outing of the Warner home office employes took place on Thursday, to Playland, Rye Beach, New York.

The 1,200 members and guests sailed on the S. S. Peter Stuyvesant up Long Island Sound to Rye. Dancing and bridge games featured the trip aboard the boat, and athletic events were held at Rye.

Members of the committee were Steve Trilling, H. M. Doherty, president of the Warner Club, Al Schwalberg, J. T. Holmes, Max Blackman, Louis Aldrich, Sam Schneider, Irving Birnbaum, Marie Carol and Gene Werner.

RCA Short Wave Circuit Transmits Letters in Full

RCA is now readying a new service, using an ultra-short wave radio circuit connecting New York and Philadelphia that enables the transmission of drawings, type matter, handwriting and other visual material in facsimile, along with the simultaneous operation of automatic typewriter and telegraph channels.

Court Winds Up Fox Met Reorganization

Federal Judge Julian W. Mack in New York, Tuesday, signed an order discharging Irving Trust Company as trustee of Fox Metropolitan Playhouses on the petition of Milton C. Weisman, as trustee of Fox Theatres Corporation, which owned all of the stock of Fox Metropolitan.

The court's action completely removed Fox Met from Federal court jurisdiction after almost five years of receivership and reorganization proceedings. The company's reorganization plan was approved by the court last summer, transferring the leaseholds and other assets to Metropolitan Playhouses, which is controlled by Joseph M. Schenck's United Artists Theatre Circuit. The Metropolitan circuit is operated by Skouras and Frisch and Rinzler.

The Fox Met proceedings are the first to be wholly concluded under the new Section 77-B of the Federal bankruptcy laws.

Fazalbhoy to New York

Y. A. Fazalbhoy, of A. Fazalbhoy and Sons, Bombay, motion picture equipment concern, will arrive in New York next week from London. He can be reached in care of the International Projector Corporation in New York.

WASHINGTON SEETHES WITH CHARGES OF CHICANERY IN "POLITICAL" FILMS

Action at Next Session Called Certain on Demand for Investigation of Government's Film Activities, Is Latest News

No Offer of General Exhibition Reported on Landon Campaign Managers' Two-Reeler of Presidential Candidate

Out of Washington last week came definite assertion that Pennsylvania's Republican Senator Davis would get action at the next session of Congress on his sidetracked resolution calling for a Senate investigation of emergency governmental agencies' motion picture activities. Release of the information as the Republican National Convention completed its business at Cleveland was regarded as well timed with relation to various rumored projects for using the screen politically in the pre-election campaign period.

Senator Davis' resolution, as introduced more than two months ago, asked a study of Works Progress Administration motion picture activities in his own state. The Senate Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments broadened it to include operations of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. It moved on then to the Committee to Audit and Control Contingent Expenses of the Senate, where a party vote resulted in indefinite postponement of action.

Agitation for Congressional investigation of WPA activities in motion picture production started on April 21st when word got out that approval had been given a WPA plan to produce a number of newsreels showing work being done by its units in various sections of the country. Something like fifty reels were talked about, each captioned in such a manner as to make it quite clear to observers which Democratic Congressmen had wangled what improvement for his district. Republicans promptly charged the administration with political chicanery and demand facts and figures.

Snell Denounces Project

Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York, Republican floor leader in the House, took to the newspapers in resounding denunciation of the project, declaring he had been told that the WPA would finance production of the pictures on a contract basis and that such action would constitute diversion of funds appropriated for the purpose of furnishing employment to the idle. Equally loud in excoriation was Democratic Senator Rush Dew Holt of West Virginia.

Representative Snell's incidental accusation that some of the pictures were to be made in color was denied by WPA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, but it was admitted that a number of newsreels would be made. Governmental production of war films and other motion pictures for archive purposes and public information was cited as precedent. On May 6th Administrator Hopkins told the House Appropriations Committee that the pictures would cost between $50,000 and $60,000 and that "no regular actors" would be used. Nevertheless, no pictures have been released and WPA executives said last week that none is being made.

OKLAHOMA THEATRES BILL THEIR TAXES

Standard Theatres, Inc., Oklahoma City, are currently displaying placards prominently in all box-office windows of their 10 theatres in Oklahoma City listing the various taxes paid out by the houses.

The card reads as follows:

"Fifteen cents of every dollar goes for the following taxes: Sales tax, 1 per cent; Federal Income Tax; State Income Tax; Corporation License Tax; Ad Valorem (Real Estate) Tax; Ad Valorem (Personal) Tax; Social Security Tax; Occupational Tax; Federal Capital Stock Tax; Consumer's Tax and Federal Amusement Tax.

"Trial Balloons"

Meanwhile other governmental agencies have produced and offered a number of motion picture subjects, each promptly described by opponents of the Administration as a "trial balloon." Chief among these in point of attention attracted and criticism aroused is "The Plough That Broke the Plains," produced by the Resettlement Administration under Rexford Guy Tugwell and offered to motion picture distributors and exhibitors for theatre presentation.

Produced by Pare Lorentz, veteran film critic, with music by Virgil Thompson, this picture was enthusiastically approved by Administration audiences in preview and heartily rejected by distributors and exhibitors as partisan propaganda. (Last week the picture went into the Cinema de Paris, intimate New York theatre specializing in foreign language productions, where it was to run with "Maria Chapdelaine," a French feature.)

Fire from the Plains

"The Plough That Broke the Plains" drew unexpected fire from certain parts of the windswept West depicted in its text as devastated by dust storms. To Texas Legislator Eugene Worley is imputed one threat to demand of the Democratic National Convention that the film be suppressed and another to give Administrator Tugwell a "punch on the nose" if it is not. Newspaper critics commented favorably on the picture, in the main, with several calling it the best production from a technical point of view that the government has turned out.

"Trial balloon" is the phrase applied by opponents of the Administration also to "Commerce Around the Coffee Cup," a 9-minute short produced by the U. S. Department of Commerce with Lowell Thomas in a double role as actor and narrator explaining intricate details of international commerce in terms of the coffee industry. The Department of Commerce has been producing pictures for several years, circulating them principally through schools, CCC camps and similar channels, with prints available in both 16 mm. and 35 mm.

"Commerce Around the Coffee Cup" was presented at the Capitol theatre in New York under somewhat extraordinary circumstances. The sponsor supplied response cards for distribution to patrons, returnable under government frank, soliciting answers to three questions. Patrons were asked to indicate (1) whether they had found the picture enlightening, (2) entertaining, and (3) whether more of the same general kind would be welcomed.

Spokesmen for the Department of Commerce have described results of the poll as faaorable, based on returns from more than 30 cities and towns in which they say the picture has been exhibited. A minimum of 250 bookings was anticipated and analysis of postcard opinion is quoted as showing about 90 per cent satisfaction with the film as entertainment.

Three Other Pictures

Three pictures have been completed recently by the U. S. Department of Agriculture, long active in this type of enterprise. They are "Stop Forest Fires," a single reel subject with sound, "Life of Plants," a silent reel showing the growth and development of various plants by the time-lapse method of photography, and "Norris Dam," a silent picture in three reels depicting construction operation of the Tennessee Valley Authority. All of these are offered to interested parties without cost and are available in 16 mm. and 35 mm. prints. None of them has stirred protest.

On the other side of the political fence, Governor Alfred M. Landon's campaign managers brought to Cleveland with them and exhibited in the Hollenden hotel a two-reel film of their own composition showing the then candidate for Republican nomination in various activities purporting to reveal his personality and habits. Delegates opposed to his candidacy said it was effective enough to defeat him if enough people saw it. His affiliates pronounced it splendid. It has not been reported offered for general exhibition.

Ada, Okla., Sunday Shows Still Banned

Mayor Bill Crawford of Ada, Oklahoma, announced June 13 that all grocery stores and meat markets in Ada must close on Sunday. Ada recently turned down a proposal to repeal an ordinance banning Sunday moving picture shows.

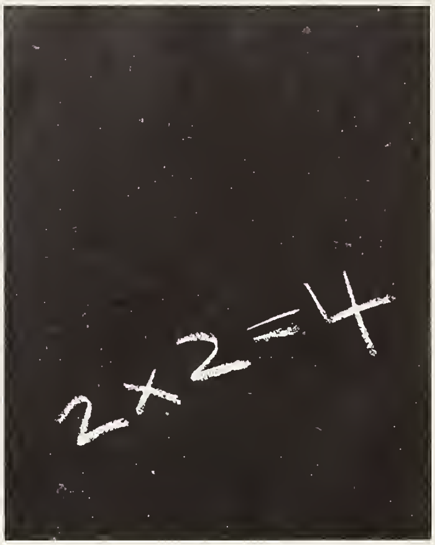
FACTS



We are in this business to make money, the same as you.

We know, as do you, that big pictures and fine pictures are the surest way to profit, that to make money you have to spend money. 2 plus 2 equals 4 in your theatre or on our books; one profitable week and one losing week equals two lost weeks. We can't make money unless you do.

RKO Radio holds an enviable place in this industry. During the past few years we have delivered more than our share of all of the big money pictures produced, as well as a record for consistently fine and substantial attractions.

You can't put more on film than you've got in your head and it takes men with brains to make big pictures. We've been buying brains!

To the solid foundation of our organization we have been adding man-power and star-power. For months we've been planning and building, reinforcing our production facilities with the best minds that money can bring together. Today our company stands strong among all producing organizations.

We are thinking in terms of big pictures!

We have star names to head our casts and if it takes two stars or ten to tell a story that's the kind of cast you're going to get.

There are several very important pictures to deliver on our 1935-36 program and they will show, better than we can tell, this new vitality of RKO Radio. Our new year strides in on the cyclonic heels of such attractions as the Katharine Hepburn-Fredric March "Mary of Scotland"; Barbara Stanwyck, Gene Raymond, Robert Young, Ned Sparks, Helen Broderick in "The Bride Walks Out"; Hepburn's "Quality Street"; John Ford's "The Plough and the Stars" and the new Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers dancing show of shows. Any one would highlight a season.

We have gone out for names—star names — paid the price and bought them. Ours is a noble list right now but we're still buying — stars, names, producing brains, stories.

URES

So solid, so real is our production policy for next season that with confidence we lay it on the table, unadorned, in black and white.

FRED ASTAIRE

will star in one musical production to be produced by Pandro Berman and directed by Mark Sandrich who gave you the record-breaking "Gay Divorcee," "Top Hat" and "Follow the Fleet."

Esperance half turned.

Danglars had staggered up from the floor, and was gazing at Esperance with eyes fairly starting from his head. With his deadly pallor and a gash on his cheek from the glass through which he had passed, Esperance bore a striking resemblance to his father. He looked as Dantes looked the day his infamous companion betrayed him at Marseilles. Danglars was appalled.

"Edmond Dantes!" he cried in agony, raising his arms high above his head, and wildly clutching the air for support. Then he fell forward on his face in an attack of apoplexy.

Esperance laid Jane again on the sofa, and ran to his assistance. He lifted him from the floor. The banker was dead.

RCA SIGNS WARNER IN "WAR" FOR DOMINANCE OF STUDIO RECORDING

Three Companies Now Added to RCA List; License Negotiations Are Underway with MGM, Universal and Others

That the reduction in rates announced by Electrical Research Products, Inc., to meet the Hollywood studio invasion of RCA Photophone will not stop RCA's aggression, was indicated on Wednesday when it was announced that Warner Brothers had joined Twentieth Century-Fox and Columbia in signing 10-year contracts for RCA recording. Warner was Erpi's first sound recording customer.

It was evident this week to observers that the two equipment companies, both backed by huge resources, had squared away for a "war" for dominance of the sound recording field, and the struggle is expected to reach a climax when some of the long-term recording licenses now held by Erpi with major companies expire in 1937. Others run to 1944. Warner renewed its Erpi contract four months ago, it is understood.

The producers will benefit not only by reduction in fees, but by the race to improve equipment in order to obtain, and hold, the film companies' business.

Warner a Sound Pioneer

Warner was the third large film company to sign a sound recording license agreement with RCA within 10 days. RCA recalled that Warner "pioneered in the introduction of sound films and thereby revolutionized the motion picture art and industry." RCA "high fidelity" apparatus and technique will be used by Warner for both features and shorts.

A number of mobile sound recording systems, mounted on motor trucks, together with studio recording, re-recording and "high fidelity" projection equipment are being shipped to the Brooklyn, New York, and the Burbank, Hollywood, studios of Warner Brothers. In addition to its producing activities on the West Coast, Warner makes a large number of Vitaphone short subjects and other pictures in Brooklyn.

RCA is negotiating with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount and Universal, as well as the producers for United Artists and the independents, for sound recording license agreements. RKO, affiliated with RCA, has used only that system.

Expanding its West Coast organization to handle the increased business, RCA this week sent Westward Edwin M. Hartley, Photophone Division head, and Lawrence B. Morris, vice-president and general counsel, of the RCA Manufacturing Company, Inc., a subsidiary of Radio Corporation of America. They will confer with James E. Francis, manager of West Coast operations, on the expansion of Photophone technical and other facilities. Both expect to remain on the Coast about six weeks.

Erpi Cuts July 1

The reduction in the Erpi sound recording charges to meet the RCA revisions are effective July 1, and are estimated by Erpi revisions to equal a cut of from 33 1/3 to 40 per cent below Erpi's present rates. Whitford Drake, Erpi executive vice-president, was not prepared to say what the reduction will amount to in dollars and cents, but one estimate was a minimum saving of $400,000 to the major companies alone.

Erpi is developing new reproduction equipment for theatres which it expects to bring out in the fall, Mr. Drake said. It has not been decided whether it will be made available at a reduced price, he said.

It is learned that Erpi is prepared to make even further downward adjustments of its royalty schedules in sound recording in the event RCA moves to lower its rates below the new Erpi scale.

Erpi's reduced rates are not expected to make its license agreement identical with RCA's. It is learned, however, that while the basis for computing Erpi's new charges may differ from RCA's, the net cost will be equally advantageous to Erpi's licensees.

The RCA license agreements closed last week with Twentieth Century-Fox and Columbia represented the first break in major company ranks since the inception of sound.

RCA Influence

That break was a development since last fall when Erpi released its licensees from certain agreements then in effect, which permitted them to make outside license arrangements for all recording above a $100,000 annual minimum, which was specified in the Erpi contracts. RCA influenced Erpi to put this modification in effect after an investigation of major studio requirements and of legal angles involved in the licensing agreements themselves, in an attempt to defeat the asserted Erpi "monopoly."

Expressing the viewpoint of the few existing "independent" sound equipment companies, James A. Miller, president of the American Mechanographic Corporation, which is distributing the new Millerfilm sound recording licenses, said he thought the current price "war" unwise, as the established equipment companies are placing sound on a basis of price instead of quality.

To prove his assertion, he explained that if a picture costs $1,000,000 to produce, and the cost of sound recording is $10,000, it is only one per cent of the total expenditure, and that a film company should have no objection to such "a relatively insignificant sum." He believed that if the competition continued on a basis of price, it would throw the entire sound recording field in turmoil.

Claims Immediate Sound

Mr. Miller said his company would make an aggressive bid for the major companies' sound recording business. The American Mechanographic Corporation has the rights for North and South America, while the European territory is served by the Phillips-Miller company, with branches in the principal cities. That firm is affiliated with the N. V. Phillips Oeilampenfabriken of Holland, which is one of the largest industries in Europe, Mr. Miller said.

Mr. Miller said that whereas present sound systems use a photographic emulsion, Millerfilm uses an emulsion which is prepared in advance and blackened, and the sound track is engraved on that, requiring no development.

He formerly was associated with Warner, he said, and in the early days of sound developed the Vitavox sound system which he later sold to that company.

Marc Klaw Dies; Noted Producer, With Erlanger

Marc Klaw, one of the very first stage producers to invade motion pictures, some 38 years ago, died Monday in Sussex, England, at the age of 78. Formerly of the famous theatrical firm of Klaw and Erlanger, Mr. Klaw passed on following a heart attack after a two days' illness. He had not been active in show business for over 10 years, the last two of which was spent in his Bracken Fell, Hassocks home, in Sussex.

Mr. Klaw began his career in 1881 as a lawyer in Louisville, Ky., where he had gone from his birthplace, Paducah, Ky. His first contact with the theatre came when Gus Frohman, brother of Charles and Daniel, retained him to hunt pirates who were producing "Hazel Kirke" without paying royalties. In 1888 the firm of Klaw and Erlanger was formed in New York.

In less than 10 years the partners had built up their booking agency from its humble beginning to a powerful theatrical syndicate, called the "trust" by its enemies. Having prospered in the booking business, Klaw and Erlanger began to produce their own shows, among the most successful of which were "Ben-Hur," "The Merry Widow," "Forty-five Minutes From Broadway," "The Pink Lady," "The Count of Luxembourg," and others.

With the arrival of the Shuberts from upstate New York a battle began which lasted for years until Klaw and Erlanger had to admit that the Shuberts were established and that they would have to share the rule with them. In 1919 Klaw and Erlanger split and Mr. Klaw became an independent producer. In 1920 he built the Klaw Theatre, selling it in 1927 to Irving Lewine. During the war Mr. Klaw was in charge of military entertainment service for the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities.

Consolidated Gets Montreal Theatre Pool

In one of the biggest Montreal theatre deals in recent months, direction of the Palace, Capitol and Imperial, operated from the Toronto headquarters of Famous Players Canadian Corporation, is being transferred to Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., a Montreal enterprise, to be grouped with the Princess and His Majesty's, which are owned by Consolidated.

The only large Montreal house not affected by the arrangement is Loew's.

The reorganization follows a similar move in Winnipeg, when Famous Players purchased the Tivoli and Osborne from Raymond Kershaw for a reported price of $175,000, after which the theatres were transferred to Western Theatres, Ltd., headed by J. Miles.

EARLY ARRIVALS FOREGATHERED IN A PROJECTION ROOM, LATER ABANDONED

PARAMOUNT stockholders attending their annual meeting in New York on Tuesday quickly overcrowded the projection room in the Paramount building, originally appropriated to their purpose, and the meeting was adjourned to more commodious quarters on the floor below. Five new board members were elected in a session marked by persistent questioning of company executives with relation to matters of personnel and policy. Lacking a quorum on initial polling of proxies, the meeting was recessed for two hours until adequate additional representation could be obtained. An account of the meeting appears on the opposite page.

THREE MOTION PICTURE MEN ELECTED TO PARAMOUNT BOARD

Richards, Balaban, Goodyear, McClintock, Agnew, Elected to Board; Meeting Recessed Until Quorum Is Obtained

Joseph P. Kennedy, who was retained as an expert and advisor to the board of directors of Paramount Pictures, Inc., having completed and transmitted his report, departed this weekend for his summer home on Cape Cod.

"Don't shoot the piano player—he's doing the best he can."

Quoting a signboard in a western barroom of boyhood acquaintance, Paramount Director Stanton Griffis thus described the board of directors of Paramount Pictures, Inc., to the hundred-odd stockholders attending their annual meeting on Tuesday in New York. The pleasantry, preceded and followed by pointed questions asked the board member as head of the special committee considering the Joseph P. Kennedy report on company status and policy, drew the only unanimous laughter of the session.

Prior to interrogation of President John E. Otterson and Director Griffis on various aspects of company affairs, stockholders representing 3,685,358 of the 7,200,395 shares of stock in the corporation had elected the following candidates to the board of directors:

A. Conger Goodyear, president of the Museum of Modern Art (two years).

Paul C. McClintock, president of Sterling Products, a drug concern (two years).

E. V. Richards, Saenger Amusement Company, Paramount affiliate (two years).

Barney Balaban, Balaban & Katz Corporation, Paramount affiliate (two years).

Neil F. Agnew, general sales manager of Paramount (one year).

Failure to name President John E. Otterson as a candidate for reelection to the board in accordance with a company bylaw specifying that the president shall be a director caused speculation as to his future status, but stockholders inquiring as to the significance of the circumstance were not answered.

Of the five new board members elected, only E. V. Richards had been mentioned as a possible candidate in advance reports of the session, which had predicted approximately nothing that happened and everything that didn't. Stockholders arriving at noon, the appointed hour, were directed to the projection room on the twelfth floor of the Paramount building, which has a seating capacity of less than forty. Advance report had it that there would not be a quorum and the meeting would be postponed. By 12:30 the attendance neared the hundred mark and stockholders moved into the rotunda on the eleventh floor where President Otterson, officiating in the absence of Board Chairman Adolph Zukor, called the meeting to order and Secretary Austin C. Keough proceeded with the filing of proxies.

At 12:45 the meeting was recessed for counting of proxies and at 1:15 President Otterson announced that an insufficient number of shares was represented, but "more are coming in" and adjourned the meeting until 3 o'clock. There were no objections to this procedure.

Quorum Is Obtained

Reassembling, the stockholders were informed by Mr. Otterson that a quorum had been obtained and that nomination of five directors to fill vacancies and succeed retiring members (himself and John Golden) were in order.

Judge Stephen Callaghan, a member of the board, moved the nomination of the men ultimately elected. The motion was promptly seconded and nominations were closed. Before Judge Callaghan had resumed his seat Saul E. Rogers, formerly general counsel of Fox Film corporation and present here in announced representation of 15,000 shares of Paramount stock, had left his to demand that the nominator inform the stockholders as to who these gentlemen (particularly Messrs. Goodyear and McClintock) were, what they had done, and what constituted their qualifications for membership on the Paramount board.

Judge Callaghan replied that everybody knew them.

Attorney Rogers said that he didn't, and that it was a right of the stockholders to be told all about them.

Judge Callaghan declared with some heat that they were "satisfactory to the board" and that he would not be cross-examined by Mr. Rogers.

Questioning Becomes General

To Attorney Rogers' side of the argument rallied Julius Levy, stockholder, who declared that industry-experienced men should be nominated and named a few, including Joseph Brandt. Also rose Irving Fisher, describing himself as an individual stockholder interested only in dividends, to reiterate Mr. Levy's point of view, and against them spoke up a venerable gentleman of undeclared identity who told the gathering what his wife had said about having confidence in the company and seemed to think that ought to settle the matter.

Attorney Rogers finally addressed to the chair a simple request for information and Mr. Otterson passed the question to Mr. Griffis, who explained that Mr. McClintock's Sterling corporation is a drug company and only one of his many interests, while Mr. Goodyear is head of the Goodyear Lumber Company and director in a number of corporations, such as the Gulf, Mobile and Northern railroad, as well as president of the Museum of Modern Art (which an unidentified heckler had tried to twist into a joke).

Joseph P. Kennedy Status Is Questioned; Stockholders Ask Nature of His Report; Board Member Gives Answer

At this point Attorney Rogers launched into a 10-minute denunciation of what he termed the "blue ribbon directors" under whose management the company had permitted "such men as Sidney Kent and George Shaefer" to leave the company and whose method for meeting a company crisis, he said, was to resign or take a long trip. This led up to the reading of replies received to letters addressed by him to former directors Henry Luce and Percy Rogers, who had notified him of their resignations, and to Charles A. McCulloch, who, though still a director, he quoted as asserting his directorship did not authorize the supplying of the information asked for.

Ballots Are Cast

Attorney Rogers completed his presentation at 3:45 and ballots were distributed. At 4:30 President Otterson announced that the votes had been counted, the directors elected, and invited a motion for adjournment. It was made, seconded, put to a vote and vociferously defeated.

Attorney Rogers again took the floor and, addressing himself to Mr. Otterson, launched a series of questions:

By whom had Mr. Kennedy been employed to survey company affairs?

By the board, he was told.

What was his mission?

To act in an advisory capacity, was the answer.

Could the stockholders be informed as to the nature of his report turned in on Friday of last week?

Mr. Otterson told him it was an interim report pertaining to matters of a competitive aspect and, in the interests of the company, was not available for publication at this time.

How was Mr. Kennedy to be paid for his services?

Griffis Answers Rogers

Mr. Otterson referred this question to Mr. Griffis as chairman of the committee to which the Kennedy report had been assigned for study and Mr. Griffis replied that the matter of Kennedy's compensation was at the discretion of the board.

Attorney Rogers asked if payment was to be made in stock and received a definite negative.

Asked whether he was to be paid at all, Mr. Griffis returned a smiling affirmative.

What was his relationship to the board? That of lawyer to client.

How long would he continue? As long as his services were satisfactory and required.

Why was it necessary to employ Mr. Kennedy if Mr. Otterson's services were to continue available to the company? The company needed all the expert advice it could get.

The attorney's next question was whether Mr. Otterson was going to continue as presi-

WPA DOMINATES STAGE FOR SUMMER MONTHS

Uncle Sam Leading Play Producer as Broadway Takes Vacation for Hot Months

With the simmering down of the Broadway theatrical season to a few remaining hit shows, Uncle Sam emerges as the dominant stage producer for the summer, and is bestirring himself with increased activity along various fronts, secure in the belief that governmental funds will be available for the federal theatre projects beyond the original June 30 deadline.

Open air shows presented to thousands in the parks in the New York metropolitan area, productions in several New York theatres, plans for a vaudeville circuit, and road tours for WPA legitimate attractions are included in the federal theatre summer program. After the confusion of the first months, the project has settled down to seeming efficiency.

The WPA's summer program is more nearly competition to motion picture theatres than the projects during the preceding months. Free shows by portable theatre units were inaugurated throughout greater New York the other day and there is a minstrel show, currently at the Majestic in Brooklyn, with performances nightly, at 25 cents top, as the forerunner to a socalled "subway circuit" of vaudeville projected by Frank Merlin, recently appointed in charge of this division. Mr. Merlin plans a circuit of 10 vaudeville theatres, giving a six-act show, six performances a week, at a top of 25 cents.

Special effort is directed to inculcating in the younger generation a taste for the stage, and to instructing them that another form of entertainment exists than motion pictures. The Children's Theatre is putting on shows at a normal price, having before it a survey made by the WPA by means of a questionnaire sent to schools, churches, settlement houses, and the like, which showed that many children cannot afford to pay for entertainment, and many others can afford to spend only 10 or 15 cents.

The WPA plans to send on tour some of its better stage productions, beginning with "Macbeth," which has an all-Negro cast, when it completes its Harlem run this week, after having drawn crowds since April 14. The "Macbeth" itinerary calls for stops in several cities in the East, and stretches west to Chicago.

"Chalk Dust," which recently closed in New York, is being staged in Chicago by a No. 2 company, and a third company is on the West Coast.

The first of the plays tested by the WPA tryout theatre in New York to be produced commercially on Broadway is "Kick Back," formerly known as "Backwash," which was scheduled to open soon at the Ritz.

SUGGESTS OTHER LINE THAN WPA SHOWS

Unemployed actors would be better off if they entered some other line of work rather than continue as actors under WPA auspices, believes Burns Mantle, drama editor of the New York Daily News.

"Isn't it a little cruel to go on encouraging the WPA actors in the belief that their profession is going to be in a position to take them back once the disappearing depression has entirely disappeared?" he asked.

"There are too many actors now. There always have been too many actors. But the boom days of the theatre greatly augmented their number. The curtailment of production threw them on the world. On the Broadway world mostly. They are, unhappily, the intermediates; neither very good nor very bad. And there just isn't any place for them in the modern theatre's schemes. The sooner they are sufficiently discouraged to seek work in other lines of endeavor the better it will be for them, for the theatre, and for the Government."

McDonough, Radio Agree on Contract

A settlement of J. R. McDonough's RKO contract, which had two years to run, has been made, the company revealed this week. Mr. McDonough's retirement from the company has been expected since he became officially inactive several months ago.

He entered the company two years ago as president of RKO Radio Pictures, relinquishing the office to Leo Spitz last fall. He then became executive vice-president of the producing company subsidiary. He made Hollywood his headquarters and is on the coast at this time. He has been comparatively inactive in RKO production affairs since Sam Briskin was elected vice-president of the producing company.

New Society in Vienna to Show Top Foreign Films

by DR. ADOLPH NICHTENHAUSER in Vienna

After long and elaborate preparatory work the "Gesellschaft der Filmfreunde Oesterreichs" (Austrian Society of Friends of the Motion Picture) has been founded in Vienna. Among the founders and the Advisory Committee are representatives of science and art, city authorities and the film industry. Among them are Professor Bühler, director of the Psychological Institute of Vienna University; Professor Gregor, director of the Austrian National Library; Professor Fellerer, director of the State School for Decorative Arts; the famous Austrian authors Robert Musil and Carl Zuckmayer, and the composer Ernst Krenek. Major Lahr, vice-mayor of Vienna, is honorary president. It is due to the indefatigable endeavors of Ernst Angel, Austrian film director, that the Film Society finally was established.

The Society's intentions are: To show to its members such outstanding films as for commercial or other reasons cannot be displayed by the Austrian picture theatres; to hold discussions on film problems, and lectures by prominent native and foreign film folk; to screen older valuable and historically interesting silent and sound pictures, and to analyze them. It is hoped that the authorities will grant freedom from Contingent fees and censorship for the films displayed by the Society.

In its first performance, to be held under the auspices of the British Ambassador Sir Walford Selby, the Society will show the famous English documentary films of the General Post Office. The Society also will try to get available pictures of the New York Museum of Modern Art Films Library. (It would, moreover, be most desirable if the programs of this Library could be shown also outside the U.S.A., either by sending them on a tour abroad or by selling or giving prints of these films to interested foreign educational or artistical institutions. As members of the Film Library shortly will come to Europe, this would offer a good opportunity to discuss these matters.)

The Film Society may gain great importance, for on the one hand there is a large public in Vienna, seriously interested in film art, but on the other hand, very little has been done so far to satisfy their requirements. Film imports to Austria are comparatively few, Contingent and censorship fees as well as titling expenses preventing the distribution of many foreign films. Furthermore, there are no specialized or repertory cinemas in Vienna. For these reasons, many outstanding films, including American, have never been shown here. Perhaps the Society will be able to fill this regrettable gap.

Henry Walthall Passes on Coast; First Film in '09

Henry B. Walthall, whose screen career dates back to the pioneer days of the industry, died in a sanitarium Wednesday at Monrovia, near Hollywood. He was 55. His wife, Mary Charleston Walthall, and a daughter, Mary Patricia, survive.

His first picture, made in 1909 and called "The Convict's Sacrifice," was under the guidance of D. W. Griffith for the American Biograph Company. Mr. Griffith then took him to Hollywood, where he enacted his most noteworthy role and the one that firmly implanted him in the hearts of audiences, that of "The Little Colonel" in Mr. Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation."

Mr. Walthall was born on his father's plantation in Shelby County, Alabama. He saw service in the Spanish-American war and then came to New York, where he gained experience in stock and road shows. He then served four years under the banner of Henry Miller.

He worked for practically every motion picture company in Hollywood at various times, and only three weeks ago he finished a role in Warners "China Clipper." Immediately after working on this production he collapsed after contracting intestinal influenza and it was this collapse that brought on his death.

Horne Appointed Radio Producer

Hal Horne has been appointed a producer for RKO Radio Pictures, Samuel J. Briskin, vice-president in charge of production, announced Tuesday at the company's sales convention in New York.

Mr. Horne began his career as an assistant director and later turned to exhibition. In 1930 he was brought by Al Lichtman to New York as advertising and publicity director for United Artists. During his regime at United Artists he served as president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers and was awarded the American Spectator prize for the best advertising in any field.

A year ago he purchased an interest in the Blackstone Company, advertising and publicity agency representing several motion picture producers in the East. He will retain his interest in the agency.

dent of the company. Mr. Griffis said that that and other matters of the same general character were subject to the judgment of the newly constituted board.

The attorney then asked whether the board in the past had discussed or considered liquidation of the Otterson contract. Mr. Griffis consulted his attorney and replied that the question was unfair.

Mr. Rogers then asked, first of Mr. Griffis and then of Secretary Keough, to be informed as to how much stock was owned or represented by the individual members of the board. Mr. Keough said the management had no official knowledge on this point and that nothing in law or in the by-laws of the company require that a director own or represent stock. In the wrangle that ensued the attorney demanded the names of the present stockholders, which he said he had been unable to obtain from company literature or by inquiry, and a list of these was read.

As Attorney Rogers finished, a stockholder announcing himself as Mr. Bull took up the thread of his inquiry and asked whether the employing of Mr. Kennedy indicated that Mr. Otterson was to be "paid off" or that Mr. Kennedy was "hired as a front man." Volunteers on all sides, some of them referring to Mr. Kennedy's service to RCA (which Attorney Rogers broke in to declare was a "totally different kind of deal"), answered Mr. Bull in chorus. When the hubbub subsided Mr. Bull was followed by a Mr. Barry, who minimized the extent of his financial interest in the company as preface to asking Mr. Griffis for a few words on the studio situation.

Mr. Griffis pronounced this "an honest question" and replied that conditions at the Paramount studio "are getting better," adding that the industry is faced with problems not encountered in earlier years, specifically the rising importance of imported product.

As Mr. Griffis concluded his answer Mr. Otterson invited a motion for adjournment and this time it carried unanimously.

The Crime of Dr. Forbes

(20th Century-Fox)

Drama

Much to engage audience and exhibitor attention is presented here. With human interest its keynote, the story is topical drama treating with the subject of mercy killing. Motivating story is logical, well grounded, and is so constructed that an air of sincere realism and conviction marks its development. At no time does it call for audiences to do any imagination stretching in order to understand what is going on. Rather in a series of boldly conceived situations it establishes its premise in an understandable manner and continues the force and effect of it through to a suspense and drama-packed climax. Essentially, with its real smash confined to the concluding scenes, the picture is poignant drama. Yet as this quality is developed there is no lack of romantic love interest or comedy, which lightens the suspense of the eventual powerful concluding action. Conveying a definite impression that producer, director and players understood that they were dealing with a controversial subject, production technique follows a trend that permits an exploitation capitalization on that quality. Likewise, for those who might not prefer to adapt that selling method, the theme and action of story permit the following of ordinary formula methods.

The early part of the film identifies characters and so throws Doctor Forbes and Ellen Godfrey together that there is reason for what happens in the concluding incidents. Therein the mortally injured Doctor Godfrey pleads with his fellow practioners Drs. Forbes, Creighton and Burkhart to put him out of his misery. All, true to the ethics of their oath and profession, refuse until Forbes, driven to the verge of madness by the mental reaction to Godfrey's pleas, consents to leave an overdose of opiates. Upon his death, Dr. Burkhart charges murder naming Forbes in her complaint.

The trial is held in the desert village locale of the death, the inhabitants of which make it the occasion for flamboyant publicity. Strength of evidence gradually convicting Forbes, the prosecutor calls his trump card, Luigi, to prove that Forbes had a motive for wanting the husband of the woman he loved out of the way. Pathetically, and comically, too, Luigi establishes this motive, detailing the many times Forbes and Ellen came to his cafe. But when Ellen's name is drawn into the case Forbes, who has been silent lest scandal be attached to her name, talks. Telling his attorney, Lane, that as a human being sympathetic to another human's suffering he had left Godfrey an extra dose, the attorney recalls Creighton and Burkhart to the stand. They, admitting a similar emotion, say that they, also, left overdoses with the dying man. The coroner is recalled to testify that poison was found in the stomach and not in the blood stream via injection, and thus must have been self administered with suicidal intent. A verdict of not guilty is directed.

Whether or not approached from a controversial standpoint—and the theme of the picture gives ample opportunities for interest creating contacts with members of the medical profession, social workers and other influence generating groups—the picture affords exhibitors something vividly different to sell. Completely off the beaten path in its dramatic content, it has an entertainment novelty for powerful appeal to any kind of an audience. Never a propaganda picture, neither defending nor decrying the theory of mercy killing, the picture is entertainment and not an adventure into a scientific treatise.

Comedy Drama

A comedy presenting nothing that is new or novel, this picture is made plausible through the medium of several creditable performances, mainly those of Henry Fonda, Pat Paterson and George Barbier.

The story is built around the character of a personable fellow who woke up one morning to find himself broke. He's adored by a girl whose intentions are always open and above board. Having for his objective a marriage that will work toward the restoration of his financial fortunes, he's easy prey for a conniving young woman who is more interested in the man's name prestige than she is of his welfare. The young man marries the designing girl and it doesn't take long for both of them to discover that they have made a mistake. The girl fades out and monetary troubles come thick and fast. Eventually the young man decides that, if he cares to eat, he must go to work. That he does, and with the little girl who really cared always in the background inspiring him, he becomes quite a radio announcer. There's a divorce and the story moves to its expected romantic conclusion.

High Tension

Comedy Drama

This picture has qualities in story content, production values and personal performances that make for acceptable entertainment. Production pitches dialogue and movement to a speedy tempo. Mainly a comedy, that being the quality underlying its romantic, dramatic and thrill action phases, the film treats entirely of interesting characters in engaging situations.

The story concerns itself with a pair of likable fellows, Reardon and Mitchell, engaged in the task of keeping undersea cables working at proper efficiency. Sequences portraying the hazards encountered in this work are both entertaining and to a certain extent educational. But when the pair go adventuring in the field of romance, in San Francisco and Honolulu, the comedy interest of the story hits its high pitch. Able to get along neither with or without his girl friend, Edith McNeil. author of exciting paper pulp fiction, Reardon takes it upon himself to do a little chiseling on Brenda Burke, object of Mitchell's affections. Results precipitate a couple of brawls, excitement of which is Reardon's beneath the sea rescue of Mitchell. This act of heroism sets everything romantically aright for a happy ending finale.

A picture that provides many angles that should make for unique exploitation.

Earthworm Tractors

(Warner-F.N.)

Comedy

Anyone who likes comedy, hilarious amusement that leans heavily towards the farcical, should get all he wants in this. The picture is all fun; even when it undertakes a romantic twist, the results are comic. Dialogue, gags, characterizations, action and situations are of comedy pattern.

Joe E. Brown performs with enthusiastic zest the character of Alexander Botts, a supersalesman with an astounding ego and confidence in his own ability. Selling himself to Russell, head of Earthworm Tractors, Botts gives salesman Healy a dose of high pressure gogetitiveness. From then on the picture concerns itself with Botts' ludicrous experiences.

First comic episode concerns itself with Botts and prospect Sam Johnson, cantankerous customer. The demonstration conducted by Botts carries Johnson on a wild swamp land tour atop the tractor. Personally disastrous to Alexander, it turns into a triumph when Jackson, with whom Botts had gotten Johnson confused, buys six tractors. Taking a romantic twist, the story continues with Alexander, finding his girl married, takes up the chase of Mabel Johnson and calls every Johnson in the Chicago phone book before discovering Mabel is the switch board girl. Another sequence shows Alexander hitching his tractor to Johnson's house and moving it across town to the wrong address as old Sam thinks the greatest earthquake in history is happening. Demonstrating a machine again to Johnson, Botts takes him on a wild mountain tour and, as dynamite explosions happen on all sides, the finale shows the pair riding the tractor on a crumbling trestle. The final explosion cures Johnson of his deafness and results in an order that will keep the Earthworm plant busy for months.

There is much material for exploitation to engage exhibitor and patron attention. Production is based on the William Hazlett Upson stories published in the Saturday Evening Post. Atmospherically and in characterizations, the show follows the vein of the stories.

Previewed in Warner's Hollywood theatre. Audience reaction to picture resulted in unrestrained laughter that many times drowned out ensuing dialogue and sound effects.

Women Are Trouble

(MGM)

Metropolitan Melodrama

Following a familiar formula, "Women Are Trouble" mixes up newspaper reporters, women, racketeers and police in a typical newspaper-gangster story. The concoction results in entertainment in which comedy dominates and in which there is the full expected quota of love interest, tinged with personal drama and vivid dabs of underworld menace.

Concerning itself with the types mentioned, the picture presents a big city in the clutches of post-prohibition gangsterism as reporters, police and citizens are in a quandary as to what to do about it. Comes tyro cub reporter Ruth, ambitious for a job on the town's biggest paper. Star reporter Casey can't be bothered; city editor Blaine has a wish to rediscover some of the old time reporters. But Ruth has a photographic mind and also carries a camera. She's on the spot when a seeming accident turns out to be a racketeer murder and an exclusive scoop results. Kidded by Casey, she's shunted out into an alley, but with her camera she gets a picture of the killer who slew the killer. She gives Blaine and Casey the jitters, but her exclusive photo tabs the gunman. The story takes a romantic twist as both newspaper men became enamored of the sob sister. It leads, after a few more comedy situations, to melodrama when gangsters Gleason and Pusher have the trio on the spot only to have their murderous intentions frustrated by the arrival of Matson's police.

Stock stuff all the way through, the picture is acted with a sparkling zip that gives it a novel and refreshing character.

Previewed in Uptown Theatre. Though the audience indicated it was able to anticipate what was going to happen, the knowledge didn't seem to interfere with its enjoyment of what did.

The Return of Sophie Lang

(Paramount)

Melodrama

This is substantial screen entertainment, well put together, merging its elements in a refreshing style combining comedy, romance and drama. As a sequel to "The Notorious Sophie Lang" of several season's ago, the picture has an exploitation value of more than ordinary interest.

Opening in novel style, Sophie, who is supposed by police to be dead, actually is alive and has the habit of visiting her tomb in London. Making a farewell visit, prior to embarking on a new life in America, she meets an American reporter, Lawson, and they are mutually attracted. As she sails to America as companion of Araminta Sedley, wealthy jewel collector, Lawson and Max Bernard, international jewel thief traveling incognito, are also aboard. Scotland Yard has warned ship officers to be on watch for Bernard. Bernard's objective is Armanta's diamond, and while Sophie resists temptation to steal, Bernard manages to grab them in such a manner that suspicion centers on Sophie.

Assuring Araminta that she is not guilty and will get the jewels back, the romance between Sophie and Lawson grows apace. Bernard manages to get the loot through customs by sliding them into Lawson's pocket and then, to insure his own safety, tips off police that Sophie, whom they know, has them. Sophie turns tables on Bernard, proves his identity to police, gets the diamonds back and becomes Lawson's wife.

Previewed in the Tower theatre, Compton, a typical suburban house, attracting family audiences, where audience's reaction indicated general satisfaction.

My Man Godfrey

(Universal)

Romantic Comedy

"My Man Godfrey" is only one thing—insane and ridiculous comedy of desirable variety. Satirical fun and foolishness is the keynote of every line of dialogue, bit of action, situation and characterization. That the qualifying "only" might not be misinterpreted, a picture of what happened to the preview audience as it watched this film unreel should be drawn. When it couldn't help but drown out ensuing dialogue with bursts of unrestrained laughter, it could only resort to limply sitting back in its seats and making a stern effort to gather fresh strength to give vent to pleasure in appreciation of the nonsense on the screen.

The show is its own showmanship. The theme of the picture can be exploited with zest and vigor; similarly, the production scope which it has been given can be ballyhooed. One can go all the way down the line of necessary requisites and find plenty to occupy his time and attention. When he gets through with the substantiating necessities and turns to consideration of names, he can start talking about William Powell, Carole Lombard, Alice Brady, Eugene Pallette, Gail Patrick, Mischa Auer, Alan Mowbray and Jean Dixon.

An attempt to give a sane resume of the picture would probably be as insane as the picture. It takes Godfrey Parke, whom audiences eventually come to know as the scion of a blue blooded Boston family, off an ash heap and sets him down as butler in the Bullock family. Here he meets the strangest lot of human oddities that one could conceive. Jean Dixon (maid) continually has his hat, coat and bag handy to accommodate a quick departure, as Powell encounters an amazing series of hilarious experiences.

Catering to the idiosyncrasies of Alice Brady (mother), who as she ministers to the vagaries of her monkey aping her singing Russian protege, Mischa Auer, drives Powell frantic. His efforts to evade the amorous wiles and strategems of half baked Carole Lombard as Irene, to keep himself out of the clutches of vengeful Gail Patrick, and to preserve some semblance of the proper relation of master and man between himself and Eugene Pallette, are comedy gems of the first water that provoked the aforesaid audience reaction.

How he effects some trace of order, saves Pallette's fortune, rids the household of the pestiferous Auer, teaches Gail Patrick what a real human being should be—all the time trying to preserve the secret of his identity, which old college chum Alan Mowbray innocently tries his utmost to reveal—serves to further the effect of the nonsense. The only one he can't handle is Carole Lombard. She's just such a sincere simpleton who can't help but follow him back to the site of his ash heap, which miraculously, under Powell's secret guidance, has metamorphosed into the locale of a gay night club wherein his derelict playmates of the dump days are gainfully employed. There he can do nothing but succumb to the girl who is determined that he shall marry her.

short subject scales the heights for the simplicity of its presentation and for its all impressive dramatic quality. "In the dawn's early light," provides the scene for the most effective shots, the gunfire between British man-of-wars and the supposedly deserted Fort McHenry. The story opens at a party at Key's home. Key is outspoken on government policies which cause embarrassment to military guests assembled and to his wife, Mary. The guests leave abruptly. Soon after a messenger arrives with order for Key, in his capacity as a government attorney, to negotiate for the release of a Dr. Beanes, held prisoner on a British battleship. Key is incarcerated on the ship pending the completion of the battle. In the dawn of the following morning Key pens, on the back of an envelope, what is now the National Anthem. Donald Woods, a superb Key, is ably supported by Claire Dodd and Joseph Crehan. Running time, 20 minutes.

Very Good

A clever and entertaining short subject from the "Merrie Melody" series in color. Pa Owl, a music professor, strictly classical, and Ma Owl, are the recipients of quadruplets. To Pa Owl's evident pleasure the first three turn out to be talented musicians but he is sorely beset when the fourth emerges as a "hotcha" crooner. Things become strained in the Owl household when the young Owl fails to mend his ways so Pa Owl kicks him out. The little Owl nonplused makes tricks for the radio station where he wins an amateur contest singing, "I Love to Singa." All is forgiven in the Owl menage. Running time, 7 minutes.

Clyde Comedy

Andy Clyde's current adventure involves him in the management of The Belle of the Ocean to which he has fallen heir and which he fondly believes to be the trim three master ship of his day dreams. Bedecked in full and flashy admiral regalia, Clyde is disillusioned by discovery that The Belle of the Ocean is merely a bleak lunch wagon. Further misfortune comes in the form of a hectic engagement with a desperate band of kidnappers. How Andy foils the villains and rescues the distressed maiden serves as an exciting and hilarious conclusion.—Running time, 18 minutes.

Scrappy's Camera Troubles

Cartoon

After several wild and frantic efforts to photograph animal life in natural surroundings, Scrappy grows disgusted and returns home with plans to snap more peaceful and congenial subjects. The first victim is Scrappy's dog Yippy, but the canine proves to be a source of equal irritation. The mongrel's heart is melted and Scrappy prepares to take his picture, whereupon Scrappy's brother, Oopy, insists on projecting himself into the camera's range. In general, the short is up to the average of the usual Scrappy cartoon with Yippy, the dog, stealing the histrionic honors.—Running time, seven minutes.

Golfing Rhythm

Sport Short

As is evident from its title, this sport short appeals primarily to the countless legion of divot devotees. However, so entertaining and expert are its construction and content, that even the non-golf enthusiast will be pleased and charmed by it. There are splendid shots of golf games conducted in varied and complicated surroundings. Gene Sarazen and Lawson Little give some polished performances in a series of exhibition glimpses. Alex Edney and Jack Redmond demonstrate some difficult and interesting trick drives. To show that the sport's sway extends to both sexes, some ladies golfers exhibit their first rate skill on the greensward. In conclusion, two tiny tots engage in a miniature golf competition for the evident amusement and approval of their seen and unseen audience. Altogether, an excellent short.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Home on the Range

Musical Western

Three or four new songs, a couple of them pretty good, are tossed into the continuity of an otherwise commonplace comedy relating the romantic adventures of a cowboy in New York and a quartette of city girls on the ranch. The ranch element predominates and the incidents owe their inception to the mistaken-identity and Charlie's-Aunt ideas in about equal part. A bit of shortening would stiffen the subject beneficially.—Running time 20½ minutes.

Cabin Kids Comedy

The Cabin Kids can sing, as no one questions, and this group of four or five of their rhythmic renditions is spaced out with pseudo-astral goings-on in a deserted house during a thunderstorm. The comedy is pattern stuff but unimportant. The pickaninnies are in fine voice and better unison.—Running time, 8½ minutes.

Cohn Predicts Move to Keep Stars Off Air

Moves within the industry to restrict the radio appearances of motion picture stars were predicted this week by Jack Cohn, vice-president of Columbia Pictures in New York, who sees the industry eventually being placed in the position of seeking a paying patronage for the same attractions which radio can offer to the public without charge.

"When the exhibitor is forced to sell names which radio offers to the nation free it doesn't require much imagination to see how the theatre's merchandise is being cheapened," Mr. Cohn said. "Why should any one who can sit comfortably at home and hear from four to six of the screen's foremost players on a great radio program for nothing journey to the theatre and pay an admission to see only one or two of those stars?" he asked.

"I know that New York executives are opposed to the wholesale appearance of stars on radio programs and at a recent meeting methods of correcting this foolish competition of our own people with the theatres in which their real popularity and income is found were discussed."

Mr. Cohn said that while no definite action was taken at the meeting referred to, he predicted that more contracts would include clauses prohibiting radio appearances in the future and that producers whose players' contracts already had such clauses would be less free to waive those restrictions henceforth. He said that Hollywood producers, too, were finding the radio activities of stars increasingly costly, not only in competitive results but in actual delays and inconveniences to shooting schedules caused by lengthy rehearsals of the players for their radio programs.

Mr. Cohn referred in particular to the Lux Theatre program staged by Cecil B. DeMille, with Clark Gable and Marlene Dietrich, and to the Louella Parsons Hollywood Hotel program featuring guest stars.

Maurice Woolf Promoted

Maurice Woolf, brother of C. M. Woolf, has been named general manager of General Film Distributors in London following a personnel shift as a result of the Universal tieups. The board of directors now includes C. M. Woolf, managing directors; Paul Lindenberg, J. Arthur Rank, L. W. Farrow, Maurice Woolf, L. A. Neel and S. F. Ditcham. The chairmanship is still vacant since the death of Sir Philip Nash.

To Mary—With Love

Comedy Romance Drama

Exploitation features tending to establish the worth of this production are many. Warner Baxter, star of the recent "Prisoner of Shark Island" and "Road to Glory," and Myrna Loy, currently in "The Great Ziegfeld," are teamed in the leads. They worked together previously in "Penthouse" and "Broadway Bill." They are supported by a cast which, in featuring Claire Trevor and Ian Hunter, also lists some better than usual names in Jean Dixon, Pat Somerset, Paul Hurst, Franklin Pangborn, Arthur Aylesworth and Florence Lake.

The story, authored by Richard Sherman, was a recent Saturday Evening Post feature. Upon completion of the screen play by Sherman in collaboration with Howard Ellis Smith, direction was assigned to John Cromwell, maker of "Double Harness," "Of Human Bondage" and "The Love Song," who also numbers "Lord Fauntleroy" among his credits.

Melding romantic love interest, comedy, drama and serio melodrama, the story has a modern savor. The locale is New York and other eastern spots, and the time covered is that of the flamboyant years of the 20's and the early months of the present decade of disillusionment, fear and uncertainty. It concerns the adventures of a young Manhattan couple, and their close friends, as they adventure in love and life, during the period encompassed. Topical production effects are geared to the atmosphere of the era when Jimmy Walker, Queen Marie of Roumania, Charles Lindbergh and the Jack Dempsey-Gene Tunney fights and kindred events held the center of the news stage.

Basically the story is one of a great love, a towering ambition, an enduring patience and a thrilling constancy that reckoned not during the years of prosperity, but all of which became realistic things in the drab days that followed. The story, combined with prestige of lead players, quality of support and production substance, seems to have the character that makes for desirable entertainment and commercially valuable showmanship.

Polo Joe

(Warner)

Comedy

Something in the natural of unusual exploitation value should come out of this production inasmuch as it is the last picture Joe E. Brown will do for Warner Brothers. It is not a farewell screen appearance by any means, but it is quite likely that some months will elapse before the player is seen again.

The title providing a definite hint as to the story's theme, it appears to be of the comedy character that will permit Brown to wind up his present association in a blase of glory. Again it's Brown the boasting braggart. Returning home from a long Oriental tour, he finds all his friends, particularly the girl of his dreams, polo addicts. Knowing nothing about the game, and hating it, the only thing he hates more is a horse. But in order to attain the object of his affections, he permits himself to be ballyhooed as an eleven goal player. He has a series of amazing experiences with horses as deathly afraid he tries to understand the beast and learn the game which culminate in the wooziest polo game ever imagined out of which Polo Joe emerges a triumphant hero, a real eleven and more goaler, and a man to whom any girl would be glad to give her hand.

As is common with all Brown's pictures, particularly this one's immediate predecessor, "Earthworm Tractors," he is the center of all the fun in action, situations and dialogue. However, in this the active cast, though small, is important to the detailing of the yarn. It will reintroduce Richard (Skeets) Gallagher to screen activity. Additionally it will present Carol Hughes, who is with Brown in the forthcoming tractor picture and supports this leading trio with Joseph King, Olive Tell, David Newell and Milton Kibbee.

The story is an original screen play by Peter Milne and Huge Cummings and is being directed by William McGann.

Pepper

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy

The entertainment intent of this production, also the key to its showmanship availability, is to give audiences many delightful glimpses of Jane Withers in a manner and to the tune of the fast moving tempo in which the public has demonstrated it prefers to see her. It's the story of an East Side waif, a tomboy leader of a gang of street gamins, with a penchant for getting into trouble. It's the kind of trouble that's serious for those she involves, but gayly amusing for those who watch it.

In the picture, the little star, who seems to be consolidating her hold on her public with each succeeding appearance, has the not too seriously dignified Irvin S. Cobb and the comic Slim Summerville for her principal stooges. Mainly the story concerns itself with how Jane causes Cobb to open his crusty old heart and become a human being as she carries him through a hectic series of adventures on the streets of New York and through the amusement devices at Coney Island. It also concerns itself with how Jane bring's Cobb into association with her addle-minded street sweeper uncle, Summerville, to permit the trio to prevent a masquerading fake nobleman from marrying Cobb's daughter and to direct the course of her love in its true path.

A production with not a serious moment, it is of a nature that has been of particular appeal to juvenile audiences, but it is also one that has an entertainment substance for grownups who appreciate the value of sparkling gay comedy. An original screen play by LaMar Trotti, direction is by James Tinling, who among other pictures has handled the American Family series, "Every Saturday Night" and "Educating Father."

In the supporting cast, Muriel Robert makes her screen debut in the romantic sequences that involve Ivan Lebedeff as the heavy and traffic cop Dean Jagger as the hero. In character and atmospheric parts George Humbert, Maurice Cass, Romaine Callender, Tommy Bupp, Reginald Simpson and Carey Harrison will be seen.

Way for a Pirate

(Warner)

Light Drama

The theme of this story moves to a down-to-earth human pitch. It is one with human interest to evoke sympathy for its character, it incorporates light drama, youthful and elderly comedy romance, adventure, excitement and melodrama. Making no bid to be a pretentious feature, the production, however, has for its objective family type entertainment.

The locale being a New England seacoast town, the story concerns itself with human characters and in the important interpretative roles, personalities who have demonstrated their ability as character actors will be seen. The motivation for all that goes on rest on the premise of a buried treasure. Long time considered just an idyocincratic old man's vision, it becomes a real and practical thing when the treasure actually is found and a punchy train of dramatic incident ensues.

The picture features Sybill Jason, Warner's child protege last seen with Al Jolson in "The Singing Kid." Sharing featured billing with her are Guy Kibbee, currently in "Captain January" with Shirley Temple and "Earthworm Tractors," and May Robson. Sequences which bring Kibbee and Miss Robson together promise to be particularly amusing. They are a pair of long time sweethearts but every time the question is popped Kibbee decides to go fishing.

The supporting cast mixes new with familiar names. The youthful romantic story is in the hands of June Bray and Fred Lawrence, both screen newcomers. Included among the better known players are Dick Purcell, Maude Allen, Granville Bates, Mary Treen and Vic Potel.

The picture is directed by Nick Grinde and is based on an original story by Earl Felton for which the adaptation was made by Tom Reed.

Mummy's Boys

(Radio)

Comedy

For their nineteenth co-starring picture, Radio has selected a typical Wheeler-Woolsey comedy story for the fun making team. For the ditch digging boys who turn archeologists it has three locales: New York, aboard a transatlantic liner, and a combination of Cairo and the Valley of the Kings in the Nile country for the third. In each place, mystery tinged melodrama contrasts the dominating comedy content and glamorous girl romance embellishment that is typical of Wheeler-Woolsey entertainment.

The story, indicating a trend that Radio will follow in much of its future production, is an original by Lew Lipton and Jack Townley, for which Townley collaborated with Charles Roberts on the screen play. Direction is by Fred Guiol, previously associated with the W-W combination in "The Rainmakers" and "Silly Billies." Production is in the hands of Lee Marcus, also a veteran co-worker with the pair.

As in past pictures, the story is colorful and

SUPERIOR COURT SAYS ASCAP IS LEGAL GROUP

Superior Court Dismisses Pending Suit; Pooling of Film Music Is Sought by Robbins

The American Society of Composers, Arthors and Publishers this week stands exonerated of all charges in a decree of Judge D. F. Wright in the Washington state superior court, who dismissed an anti-trust suit against the Society and ordered the receiver discharged.

ASCAP was placed in receivership in the state of Washington in August, 1935, after G. W. Hamilton, attorney general, filed a suit to oust the Society from the state on the ground of monopoly law violation. He was supported in the move by the broadcasters.

The court ordered the receiver to return to ASCAP all assignments of copyright which had been made to him under the previous order, as well as all other property and records, and cancelled all license contracts and assignments made by the receiver after January 1, 1936.

The decree, which was given at Olympia, Wash., declared ASCAP "necessary to protect the performing rights of authors, composers and music publishers, and is a convenience and necessity to the users of music in obtaining the performing rights." The users of music would be "considerably embarrassed, impeded and delayed and put to considerable expense if they had to deal separately with each piece of music performed and with each owner of the performing rights of each such piece," according to the decree.

The court found that the Society "was formed for lawful purposes . . . and as the same is being conducted, is approved as a working, feasible plan and is not violative of any of the laws of the state of Washington, or of the Constitution."

The receiver was directed to collect all amounts due from licensees, including theatres, up to and including December 31, 1935, except such users as have paid directly to the Society during the receivership.

ASCAP officials in New York hailed the decision as "a great victory," and predicted that the criminal indictments filed against the Society's officers in Snohomish county, Washington, alleging anti-trust law violations, would be dismissed as a result of the superior court decree.

The Washington state suits were the target of the last fight made by Nathan Burkan, ASCAP general counsel, on behalf of the Society, before he died recently. Mr. Burkan also had planned to move against "snipe" legislation in various localities. ASCAP is harassed by a $2,500 tax on copyright license agents in Miami, and faces similar proposals in Wisconsin, Georgia and the city of St. Louis. A law passed by the Louisiana legislature assessing ASCAP's agents $5,000 a year in each parish was declared unconstitutional and has not been enforced, E. C. Mills, ASCAP general manager, said this week.

A successor to Mr. Burkan as general counsel has been discussed informally by ASCAP officials, but meanwhile Charles Schwartz and Louis Frohlich, who were associated with Mr. Burkan, will continue to handle ASCAP's legal affairs until a general counsel is named by the directors, probably late this month.

Meanwhile, Jack Robbins, head of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer music activities, has inaugurated a move for a pooling of copyrights by music publishing subsidiaries of major film companies, whereby the producers would exchange music copyright privileges, either without charge or at a minimum cost. This would seriously affect the Music Publishers Protective Association, which now grants synchronization rights to the film studios.

The first step in the pooling move was seen this week in a 20-year contract giving the Robbins and Leo Feist music companies exclusive rights to all music in Twentieth Century-Fox pictures. The agreement will be effective on the expiration of the film company's agreement with Sam Fox Music Company, on October 1, 1937. MGM subsidiaries will make royalty agreements with Movietone Music Corporation, a subsidiary of Twentieth Century-Fox.

In addition, the Robbins organization is about to effect a contract with the Cinephonic Music Company, Ltd., of London, a subsidiary of Gaumont British, whereby it will handle that company's music in the United States.

Plea for Small Town Copy Made At Ampa Meeting

With the presentation of awards for outstanding achievement in the fields of motion picture advertising and publicity in the 1935-36 season the special business, the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers held the first meeting of its kind at New York's Hotel Astor last Thursday. The presentations were made by John Benson, president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies.

The assembled 200 industry executives and advertising and publicity men heard a plea from Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, for greater attention to the exploitation needs of the small town exhibitor and less emphasis on the "metropolitan viewpoint and highbrow copy."

"The stars are fast losing their drawing power at the box office, and the small exhibitor has no time or ability to devote to building up the newcomers," he said. "He follows the line of least resistance. It is your task to impress on him the need for stressing new faces. We need new talent and it is up to the exhibitor to popularize them. You must show him the way."

The same note was sounded by Al Lichtman, executive assistant to Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, who suggested that the Ampa might well include in its future awards one for "the most efficient method of selling an original story of merit which featured an unknown player." He said the distributors have found it "next to impossible to sell a picture lacking box office names without heroic measures, and no problem is more important financially to a picture company."

Martin Quigley told the assembly he was interested in motion picture trade paper advertising because of his great concern that it should do several important things for the motion picture, that it shall be a definite sales auxiliary and properly represent the right ideals of the motion picture and the industry.

"It was 40 years ago last April that the first motion picture advertisement appeared," Mr. Quigley recalled. "Since then developments and progress in motion picture advertising have attracted the attention of the motion picture world.

"Only a few months ago a great publication carried an article appealing to advertisers to adopt a reasonable regulation of the character of their advertising.

"Motion picture advertising has done a splendid selling job and has attracted attention in advertising circles generally, and has so ordered its house as to win that distinguished approval. You men directly concerned with its production have performed a service to the motion picture and the industry that merits approbation. I congratulate you on your achievements and hope that the fine standards that have been attained will be maintained."

In presenting the awards, Mr. Benson said that contests of this type give a stimulus to better advertising by recognizing the men who actually do the work. Citing some film advertising statistics, he mentioned that 15,000 separate advertisements are turned out daily in the motion picture field.

Good copy, he said, should be judged by the honesty of its appeal, the impression it makes on readers, and its fair play to competitors. It is one thing to tell a plausible story and another to tell it with sincerity of statement and service to readers, he declared, adding that some advertisers have found it difficult to frame a message within the bounds of decorum.

Howard Dietz was toastmaster. He was presented by Gordon S. White, president of the Ampa.

As announced in the June 13 HERALD, plaques were presented to these first award winners: for the best advertisement addressed to the film trade, Moe Kallis, Paramount; best advertisement addressed to the public, Leo Quanchi, RKO Radio; best poster, Joseph Tisman, Warner Brothers; best press sheet, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, accepted by Mr. Dietz on behalf of his department.

Blyth Arrives in New York

David R. Blyth, supervising manager for Warner Brothers in India, Java and the Straits Settlements, arrived in New York, from Bombay, India. This is his first visit home in several years and he has come for the combined purpose of home office conferences and a vacation.

New Trailer Company

Theatre Trailer Corporation, new trailer company, has begun activity with headquarters in the Film Center Building in New York. The company already has trailers on all releases for 1935-36 except for Warner and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures.

Error and Echo

Errors committed in Hollywood's spendthrift youth are not without overseas echo, according to Joseph M. Schenck, board chairman of Twentieth Century-Fox, who will spend the remainder of the summer in the production colony. Observations made during his two months in Europe are summed up in the following expressive language:

"England is now going through the same growing-pains stage that was felt by Hollywood in its earlier boom days. The British public is the greatest movie audience today and the fever of movie-going has led to abuses in the field of production. Money for production is readily and easily obtainable and the result is that many irresponsible persons, with little or no knowledge of the business, have entered the field."

Exempting the men associated with his company in foreign production, Mr. Schenck continued, "In aping the style of Hollywood production inexperienced producers are making too many costly, large-scale pictures suitable only for the British market. These can not hope to bring back the money spent on them, for the cost is not scaled to the market. When the hubbub dies down sufficiently there will be a sad awakening for many of the British financiers who placed their money in incompetent hands."

Time Tells

That time spent in production tells a pleasant box office story is a current popular Hollywood conviction. At least a dozen pictures now before the cameras have shooting schedules of two months or more. Among them are MGM's "The Gorgeous Hussy" and "The Good Earth," Columbia's "The Lost Horizon," Paramount's "The Texas Rangers" and "The General Died at Dawn," Radio's "I Won't Dance," Twentieth Century-Fox's "Ramona," Warner's "Charge of the Light Brigade" and the Selznick-International's "The Garden of Allah."

It was not always thus, nor even nearly thus. A brief bit back three or four weeks was considered ample shooting time for everything but the most elaborate spectacles. Today the so-called program picture is geared to that schedule and anything made in less time is called a quickie.

It's possible to find people who don't subscribe to the principle now in general application, but nobody tries to. They compose a pessimistic minority. The majority inclines toward the optimistic point of view, frequently citing the always quotable "better mouse trap" theory as though news of it had just trickled over the mountains. Between minority and majority stand the numerically few but financially influential statistical students and these, comparing production calendars and box office grosses of pictures that have given impressive account of themselves in the past three seasons, have sided with the majority. All agree, of course, that time itself will tell the truth about how much of it should be spent in production.

Production

Indicative of the activity that may be expected to continue in the production colony during the summer months, Hollywood started ten pictures during the past week and completed seven. Though several studios are comparatively quiet, picture schedules announced by companies that have held conventions and indicated by others promise to keep the production mills moving at a rapid pace.

MGM came out of its lethargy and put three pictures in the work. "Old Hutch" will star Wallace Beery with Cecelia Parker, Eric Linden, Robert McWade, Si Jenks, Cy Kendall, Elizabeth Patterson and Donald Meek. J. Walter Ruben is directing. In "Picadilly Jim," which Robert Z. Leonard directs, Robert Montgomery, Madge Evans, Frank Morgan, Billy Burke, Reginald Owen, Aileen Pringle and Grant Mitchell are the principals. With these two pictures featuring groups of players that were impressive in "Ah Wilderness" and "The Great Ziegfeld," the third, "His Brother's Wife," will star the rapidly rising favorite, Robert Taylor, and Barbara Stanwyck, with Jean Hersholt, John Eldridge, Edgar Edwards, Joseph Calleia and Samuel Hinds also listed. W. S. Van Dyke is directing.

Continuing a steady pace, Warner has two pictures before the cameras. Both are of unusual topical importance. In "Polo Joe," Joe E. Brown is making his farewell appearance under the WB banner. The support includes Carol Hughes, Gordon Elliott, Olive Tell, David Newell and Joseph King, among others. Direction is by William McGann. Because it deals with the experiences of the two men recently trapped in the Nova Scotia coal mine, "Cave In," previously announced as "Draegerman's Courage," a widely exploited newspaper catch phrase, comes into the topical class. Louis King directs the picture, which will present Jean Muir, Barton MacLane, Dick Purcell, Henry O'Neill and Helen McKellar in the main roles.

Two pictures started also a Columbia. In "The Fighter" James Dunn, June Clayworth, George McKay, John Gallaudet, Victor Kilian and Sarah Edwards will be seen. Gordon Wiles is directing. With Alfred E. Green as director, "There Goes the Bride" will present Chester Morris, Fay Wray, Lionel Stander, Raymond Walburn and Henry Mollison.

The only picture actively going along on the Universal lot is "Boss Rider of Gun Creek." A Buck Jones production, he is supported by Muriel Evans, Harvey Clarke, Mahlon Hamilton, Lee Phelps, Ernest Hilliard and Tom Chatterton. Lester Salander is directing.

Republic started "The Gentleman from Louisiana." The cast includes Eddie Quillan, a recognition of popular demand, Charlotte Henry, John Miljan, Chic Sale, Marjorie Gateson, Charles Wilson, Pierre Wotkin, Ruth Gillette, Arthur Wagner and Matt McHugh, Irving Pichel is directing.

Though Samuel Goldwyn is still recuperating, his company started "Dodsworth." In it Walter Huston returns to the American screen and he is supported by Ruth Chatterton, Mary Astor, Paul Lukas, David Niven, Gregory Gaye, Kathryn Marlowe and Spring Byington. William Weiler directs.

Two pictures were finished at Paramount. The cast of "Yours for the Asking" lists George Raft, Dolores Costello Barrymore, Ida Lupino, Reginald Owen, James Gleason, Lynne Overman, Skeets Gallagher, Edgar Kennedy, Louis Natheaux, Robert Gleckler, Keith Daniels, Walter Walker, Huntley Gordon, Ralph Remley and Richard Powell (not the Warner star.) Alexander Hall directed. In "Rythm on the Range," which Norman Taurog handled, Bing Crosby and Frances Farmer head a cast that includes Bob Burns, Samuel Hinds, Warren Hymer, Lucille Gleason, George E. Stone, Martha Raye, James Burke, Irving Bacon, Eddie Waller and Martha Sleeper.

Warner completed "I Gave My Heart." Kay Francis and George Brent are starred with Roland Young and supported by Patric Knowles, Freida Innescourt, Zeffie Tilbury, Henry Stephenson, Halliwell Hobbes, Elspeth Dudgeon and Helen Flint. Archie Mayo directed.

MGM finished "Suzy." Featured players are Jean Harlow, Franchot Tone, Cary Grant, Lewis Stone, Benita Hume, Inez Courtney, Reginald Mason, Tempe Piggott, Greta Mayer and Christian Rub. George Fitzmaurice directed.

At Hal Roach studio production wound up on "Mister Cinderella." The complete cast: Jack Haley, Betty Furness, Arthur Treacher, Raymond Washburn, Robert McWade, Edward Brophy, Monroe Owsley, Kathleen Lockhart, Rosina Lawrence, Tom Dugan, John Hyams, Leila McIntyre, Tobin Wing, Iris Adrian and Charles Juddels. Edward Sedgwick directed.

"M'liss" was completed at Radio. It will present Anne Shirley, John Beal, Guy Kibbee, Moroni Olsen, Douglas Dumbrille, Frank M. Thomas, Ray Mayer, Arthur Hoyt, Barbara Pepper, Margaret Armstrong, William Benedict, James Bush, Fern Emmett and Esther Howard. George Nichols, Jr. directed.

The final picture completed this week is the last Reliance production for United Artists release, "The Last of the Mohicans." The cast: Randolph Scott, Henry Wilcoxon, Binnie Barnes, Heather Angel, Bruce Cabot, Robert Barrat, Philip Reed, Hugh Buckler, Willard Robertson, Frank McGlynn, Sr., Will Stanton, Lionel Belmore and Reginald Barlow. George B. Seitz directed.

Voluble Visitor

Up from Brazil, where he is Universal's sales manager, for his first visit to Hollywood in five years, Al Szeckler finds the habitat of the world's greatest collection of supermen and women a changed place. Long time employee of the Laemmles, Al, quite naturally, is thrilled with the new Universal spirit and enthusiastic about future product.

Easy to talk to, speaker of half a dozen languages, and voluble in the jargon that a Hollywood reporter can understand, it was not much of a job to switch conversation to the film business in Brazil. All his observations were interesting, many revealing.

American pictures control about 90 per cent of the Brazilian market. The theatre goers prefer them, but their tastes appear to be as widely varied as are those of the American picture patron. The natives go wild about musical pictures. Whenever a singing-dancing show hits the towns, the Brazilians pretty much forget everything else.

At the same time, well done serious romance or drama impresses them, particularly in the larger cities, but the folks who live in the back country, like their rural American brethren, want the westerns and the action films. Currently Robert Taylor and Clark Gable are the reigning stellar favorites.

Through Motion Picture Herald, the Brazilian theatre operator keeps as close watch on what is happening in this country as do their American fellow exhibitors, says Mr. Szeckler. Interested in production activity, they pay considerable attention to release schedules and are particularly interested in the Theatre Receipts chart and the What The Picture Did for Me section. Sometimes this interest is a pain in the neck to hyper-enthusiastic salesmen who, as they rant and rave about how long a certain picture ran in American key cities and what it grossed at the box office, are somewhat embarrassed to have their customers open up the Herald and cite facts and figures that are the direct opposite to the salesman's claims.

THE CUTTING ROOM

exciting in its comedy, romantic, mystery and dramatic phases. As these elements are being blended in film form, there is the natural and expected tendency to keep the leads prominent in all action. At the same time the objective of novelty has been stressed.

With the Wheeler-Woolsey brand of entertainment having established its own type of exploitation, this particular vehicle appears to be of the class that will permit the introduction of much that is new in ballyhoo. Possibilities for this are found not only in story and production character, but in the supporting cast as well, which includes among many known names such as Barbara Pepper, Frank M. Thomas, Moroni Olsen, Francis McDonald, Mitchell Lewis, Paul Porcasi, Willie Best and Charles Coleman, in addition to a bevy of Hollywood beauties who supply the girl glamour.

Never Gonna Dance

Musical Comedy Romance

Many things in this production recommend themselves to showmanship attention. It is the fifth feature in which Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers have been co-starred. A tuneful, rhythmic feature, it is the successor to "Gay Divorcee," "Roberta," "Top Hat" and "Follow The Fleet." Studio enthusiasm has it that this picture in production scope, character of story, class of music and dancing will top any of the others as an entertainment exploitation picture.

The story, which is being given lavish and colorful production in all details, is an original by Erwin Gelsen and Howard Lindsay and Allan Scott collaborated on the screen play. The director, George Stevens, numbers among his recent successful credits "Alice Adams" and "Annie Oakley."

Music and lyrics are by Jerome Kern and Dorothy Fields, and there are seven or eight of them to be sung by Astaire and Miss Rogers as solos and in duet, backed by singing and dancing boy and girl choruses. The dances, both those featuring Astaire and Rogers individually and together as well as those in the boy girl routine step background, were handled by Hermes Pan. Eight of these are included and the modernistically contrived swing number is being looked forward to as becoming a popular sensation. The extent to which production backgrounds have been considered is seen in the fact that John Harkrider, who created the "Pretty Girl is Like a Melody" set in "Ziegfeld," designed the background for the Astaire chorus embellished hand and foot tap spectacle.

The story is modern in character, blending comedy, romance and light drama as it deals with the adventures of a great dancer and a public dance hall instructress in love and life. It is prepared to develop a series of situations that permit audiences to see the stars as they best prefer them.

With almost sixty important parts in the production, not including the choruses, supporting featured players are headed by Helen Broderick, Erik Blore and the noted stage players Georges Metaxa and Victor Moore.

G. K. Chesterton, 62, British Writer, Dies

Gilbert K. Chesterton, for more than a generation a leading personality in English literature, died at his home in Beaconsfield, Eng., this week after a brief illness. He was 62. His widow, Mrs. Frances Blogg Chesterton, survives. Noted as one of the most prolific writers of recent generations, and a master of the paradox, Mr. Chesterton wrote a series of detective stories which were used as the base of the motion picture, "Father Brown, Detective."

Rites for Mrs. Grauman

Funeral services for Mrs. Rosa Grauman, mother of Sid Grauman, who died Saturday, were held at noon Tuesday at Forest Lawn Cemetery in Hollywood. Active pallbearers included Louis B. Mayer, Jack L. Warner, Al Jolson, Irving Thalberg, Edward Mannix and William Goetz. Many civic and film leaders acted as honorary pallbearers, the list including Dr. A. H. Giannini, Harry Chandler, Buron Fitts, Mayor Frank Shaw, Abraham Lehr, Archie Mayo, Edgar Selwyn and others.

A Christian Science reading by Theodore Chelson marked the rites.

Pettey to Coast Office

Tom Pettey, special press representative of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., is en route to Hollywood from New York on a permanent assignment as assistant to Lupton Wilkinson of the Producers Association. Wilkinson has been ill for some time past. Pettey's successor in New York has not been named as yet.

IATSE OUT TO UNIONIZE 9,000 FILM THEATRES

Delegates to IATSE Convention Given "New Perspective" on Position of Labor in Motion Pictures; New Constitution

Organization Says It Has Defeated All Attempts to "Raid" Labor Since Invalidation of NRA

Seven hundred delegates attending the convention of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators left Kansas City last weekend and the scene of the 33rd annual meeting of the motion picture's biggest union—29,000 members—with a new perspective on the place of organized labor in the sun of the motion picture, especially in connection with the aims of the IATSE's ordinarily secretive managing board to further extend unionization within the business and elsewhere in the theatrical world. Out of the convention came these highlights:

Vigorous efforts will be expended on making labor's position more secure. Immediate steps will be taken to unionize 9,000 non-union motion picture theatres.

Fear for the loss of the favorable conditions won under the NRA is no longer necessary, the IATSE claiming that it has defeated all attempts made by industry to "raid" labor since the invalidation of the Blue Eagle.

Considerable progress was made during the year in improving working conditions in the motion picture industry.

Negotiations with exhibitors for new season's contracts for projectionists were said to have been carried out "more harmoniously and peacefully than in years."

"Means must be provided whereby the groups of unofficial, politically ambitious members of Local 306 (New York) will not be able to embarrass the future efforts of the general office."

"A tale of mismanagement, wasted treasury and non-union conditions" exists in Local 170 (Kansas City).

"Aggressive action is needed to remedy the shameful unorganized condition of independents in Los Angeles."

Conditions in Canada are "annoying" to the IATSE.

The IATSE will urge the "breaking-in" of theatre stage employees as projectionists to prevent the necessity of calling in outside non-union men in emergencies.

Two-men-in-a-booth legislation will be sought everywhere.

Progress was reported in unionizing sound service men, and major companies already are declared to be recognizing their new status.

The board moved for a coordinator, to work under President Roosevelt, to accelerate industrial recovery, eliminate unemployment, maintain business and labor conditions.

Consideration is to be given the establishment of a separate classification and uniform wage scale for union members in industrial projection. Efforts will be made to increase the popularity of advertising films in order to stimulate employment of operators.

Locals moved for a television charter.

A new constitution and bylaws, adopted unanimously, is expected to set up self-regulation within the IATSE to discourage members from taking the "troubles" of individual locals into the courts.

George E. Brown, president, and his whole regime were returned to office.

Assertion of the right and wisdom of the International Alliance to demand vigorously and constantly the place of labor in the sun of the motion picture industry was keynoted for the convention by President George E. Browne.

KANSAS CITY FIRST RUN CUTS ITS PRICES

The Tower, downtown first-run in Kansas City operated by Barney Joffee and Bill Reinke, has reduced admissions for the summer, going from 25 and 35 cents to straight 25 cents. The house probably will go back on the old schedule the middle of August or the first of September, according to Mr. Joffee.

The situation is unique in that it is the first downtown first-run to slash prices to meet summer distractions, and it is expected that other houses will be forced to follow the Tower's move.

"Most of the employing interests interpreted the Supreme Court's action in pronouncing the NRA unconstitutional as a signal for a wholesale raid to destroy all favorable conditions gained and maintained under it, and immediately proceeded to make universal and excessive demands. But the decisive stand taken by our local organizations, together with the publicity focused on the assessments levied for the purpose of preparing to withstand any attacks on our Alliance, seems to have had a strikingly deterrent and discouraging reaction, as the original anticipated perpetrations simmered down to a whisper," Mr. Browne said.

"Deviation from precedent and prescribed observances invariably draws criticism, but one of the advantages of this form of operation was that it served to keep in doubt those with whom our relations implied an uninformed state was desirable. The absence of precedent inflicted upon them a distressing and provoking hardship."

Calls Relations Harmonious

As a result of the Alliance's "vigorous stand," Mr. Browne pointed out, contractual negotiations were carried out with exhibitors under the most harmonious and peaceful conditions in years.

Yet Mr. Browne shed a figurative tear over the "shocking verdict" that killed the Blue Eagle. He pointed to the benefits derived from the NRA by IATSE locals: Of 493 working under the motion picture code, 152 locals increased employment as a result; 203 signed contracts; 59 maintained conditions; 48 improved working conditions; 206 received beneficial effects of various sorts, and 37 organized "unfair" houses.

Creation of the two per cent defense fund commencing July 15, 1935, "seeped out and reached the ears of these industrial connivers, who received the supreme court verdict with open arms, who elected to look upon it as a license to inflict upon their employees any terms they saw fit, who regarded it as a gilt-edged invitation to remove all the barriers to a free for all wage-slashing crusade and the immediate return to the conditions of the sweat shop era," boomed Mr. Browne. A period of tranquility followed the start of the defense fund, he added.

Of the troubled affairs in Local 306, New York, Mr. Browne said, "I should be derelict in my duty if I did not call attention to the necessity of clearing up at the earliest possible moment the unorganized conditions in Local 306. Means must, however, be provded whereby the groups of unofficial, politically ambitious members will not be able to embarrass the future efforts of the general office in bringing about a solution of their difficulties, as they have done in the past." He called attention to the circulars and anonymous letters of a derogatory nature sent out by various groups of members in the past, the secret meetings, the threat of court action to oust the general office from its stewardship of the local, etc. Mr. Browne has had a complete audit made of the local's financial condition, and this is being submitted to national officers.

Mr. Browne found "a tale of mismanagement, wasted treasury and non-union conditions" in the history of Local 170 at Kansas City. "The affairs of the union were so bad the managers refused to deal with its representatives." Since the International took charge, with Harland Holmden, national vice president, supervising its operation, however, the local is operating along business lines, Mr. Browne reported. No houses have been lost and the wage scale and working conditions have been maintained.

Working conditions have improved generally throughout the United States and Canada, wages and employment have increased, the dual-union situation in many spots has been improved or eliminated, and "unfair" houses have been brought around in many instances, Mr. Browne commented.

However, "aggressive action is needed to remedy the shameful unorganized condition of independents in Los Angeles."

In New England, the Alliance still is faced with three non-union managements: E. M. Loew, Lieberman, and another circuit.

Conditions in the middle west and south were said to be good.

In the east, several dual union organizations in the New York territory represent a serious, disrupting influence, the delegates were informed.

Even the legitimate theater situation in New York has had its best season since 1929, the convention heard.

However, a federal theater survey by the government discloses that out of 14,000 theaters, only 5,000 are employing members of the Alliance. "Such statistics are vividly enlightening" to Mr. Browne, "As to the enormous number of unorganized theaters within the industry and afford an authentic source for serious consideration."

In Canada, the dual union organization situation in Saskatchewan and Quebec, as well as a portion of Alberta, is troubling the Alliance. The organization is particularly "annoyed" because certain elements, frequently when victory was in sight, have deserted to the other unions "The International must meet this unwieldly situation in some positive manner," Mr. Browne declared.

HIGHLIGHTS OF NEW CONSTITUTION

The new practice of reporting executive board meeting minutes separately Mr. Browne regards valuable, particularly because it keeps the information from falling into the hands of those for whom it is not intended.

A surplus of income over expense ($23,940) and a cash balance of $90,906, pleased Mr. Browne. On May 15, 1936, liabilities were only $2,491. Membership increased 5,635 in the two-year period to a total of 28,877 on May 15.

Problem of Cashiers

The Alliance is undetermined as to what it shall do regarding theatre cashiers, doormen and ushers. It assumed jurisdiction over those groups that had organized, "in order to avoid extremely dangerous results which would have arisen had another established national organization secured control of these workers."

Mr. Browne urged the breaking-in as motion picture operators members of stage employee locals; enforcement of travel requirements and enforcement of adequate manpower for maintenance work to decrease unemployment. Stage employees able to operate projection machines would prevent the necessity of calling in outside men, of accepting non-members in the local, etc.

He urged locals to have legislation enacted requiring two-men operation in all theatres. Protective legislation of this sort is vitally essential because "it is a safe predicton there will be no abatement in the unremitting drive waged by the controlling 'circuit' interests in the past to break down the excellent terms of employment already established," he warned.

"A great deal of pressure was brought to bear upon officials of the WPA by various employing interests in the theatrical industry for the elimination of the Federal Theater Project." This unwarranted attack on the employment opportunities of Alliance members was said by Mr. Browne to have been successfully combatted, largely due to the concerted and emphatic response on the part of Alliance membership. The WPA theatrical project will, Mr. Browne said, continue for many months to come.

$90 for Sound Men

While time did not permit Mr. Browne to complete unionization of sound service engineers and employees, most of whom are with ERPI or RCA, he asserted "that much progress has been made. In fact, an offer of $90 per week already has been made to the IATSE by major companies for sound service men, who are to be members of the Alliance exclusively.

The convention especially took up the question of, and unanimously voted for a new constitution and by-laws, worked out by a committee of which Harland Holmden is chairman.

In explanation of the why and how of the new constitution and by-laws, Mr. Browne said, "The present International constitution and by-laws and those of our local organizations, almost without exception, were drawn up prior to the time that labor turned legal and started its wild stampede on the courts. The provisions embodied therein are of antiquated origin and have not kept pace with the constant changes, rulings and decisions transpiring in legal channels. The underlying source causing a major portion of discord is occasioned by ambiguous laws that the ordinary layman may interpret to suit his own purposes, but which fail to stand up in the civil courts.

"U" TO PUT 14 INTO WORK BEFORE JULY 15

Although Universal has only one picture, "Postal Inspector," shooting at present, 14 are scheduled to go into production before July 15. They will include "Casey of the Coast Guard," a John Wayne action picture; "Big," with Victor McLaglen and Binnie Barnes; "Flying Hostess," with Jane Wyatt; "Everybody Sings," with an all-star cast of radio and screen names; "Yellowstone," with Judith Barrett, and "Reno in the Fall" with Doris Nolan and Henry Fonda.

"Unprincipled attorneys have dug deeply into the coffers of our organization because of the lack of intelligence and foresight displayed by some of our legal-minded members, who immediately rush into the sanctuary of some lawyer seeking succor, before resorting to prescribed procedures of the IATSE constitution.

"After seeing the color of the prospective client's money, regardless of whether he has a bona fide claim, he is egged on to making a fight of it, with the natural consequence that the local union, and in some instances the International, finds itself compelled to engage legal aid and before long is enmeshed in compound and complex legal entanglements. This has exercised a serious drain on the finances of our locals and the Alliance, as well, which is a ridiculous and asinine expenditure, as in the long run the only ones to benefit by such financial outlays are the misleading barristers.

Constitutions Studied

"We have sought to afford our locals the fullest measure of protection through eliminating existing deficiencies in the present regulations, in the nature of obsolete laws. The constitutions of over 30 labor organizations affiliated with the A.F. of L. were carefully analyzed and studied, with the best features of each selected and embodied in our revised form. Most of these provisions have withstood constant assaults in the courts with decisions and favorable verdicts being handed down substantiating their legality. By utilizing these tested and established laws, the number of members seeking redress in the courts will be reduced to a minimum, inasmuch as provision is likewise made for exhausting all remedes within the International before any redress through the courts is possible. Conformity with this one, far-reaching and comprehensive clause will alone result in an enormous saving of money and trouble to both the International and our local organizations," Mr. Browne explained.

Basically, the revision and rearrangement of the constitution and by-laws have for this purpose the setting up of self-regulation in such a manner that it will be respected in the courts. Material has been rearranged to follow legal and judicial procedure more closely, and Mr. Holmden expressed the belief that a good deal of procedure heretofore followed as a matter of policy but not maintained in the constitution or by-laws is here included, primarily for the purpose of impressing the courts and gaining consideration from them.

"Discipline used to be self-imposed and accepted by members," Mr. Holmden commented. "But today, if a member is disciplined, he frequently goes into court. The first thing the courts ask for is a copy of the local constitution, and the litigation usually starts off with the judge throwing out that document.

Agreement of members to discipline by the Alliance and its laws, and under no circumstances resort to civil courts until all remedies provided by the Alliance are exhausted, is stressed in the new pledge. The pledge replaces the preamble, and is designed to prevent "trouble" from apprentices and "juniors." The pledge has to be signed before admission.

Too, no person can be a member of the Alliance or a local "Who shall be a member of any organization having for its aim or purpose the overthrow, by force, of the constitution and government of the United States or Canada." This, Mr. Holmden commented, is "to show the courts that we are a law abiding organization."

Calls Qualifications Stricter

Qualifications and duties of members are in general more strict, and applicants must hereafter pass an examination for competency and fitness.

The post of general counsel was created. The president shall select an attorney or attorneys for the position who are familiar with labor problems and laws. His term shall not be longer than the president's. The president shall fix his compensation with the approval of the executive board. One trouble has been, Mr. Holmden said, that IATSE locals engaged attorneys only when they need them badly, which has tended to increase costs, and locals have frequently hired men unfamiliar with labor law.

Though it has been a policy to do so, it now is made mandatory for the president to call regular meetings of the executive board—two each year, one in midwinter, one in midsummer. In the past, courts frequently have ruled that the constitution of locals and of the Alliance provided no definite meetings of the board so that the accused or accusing member had no chance for an appeal within a reasonable time.

Duties and powers of the president in general were more clearly detailed and defined, and procedure more thoroughly explained. For instance, his power to institute a suit against an officer or member of the Alliance in cases of misappropriation or funds or property of a local is outlined, obviating the court criticism of the past on the protection of its property by a local in such cases. This article Mr. Holmden termed one of those most scanned by judges. He expressed the belief it will now stand up in court.

Impeachment Clause Strengthened

The article on impeachment of officers was strengthened to make it stand up in equity courts. A complete set of forms has been evolved for use in filing charges, in making appeals, and so on, and these, together with other official forms, such as contracts, are included in the by-laws. Charges must be in the form of affidavits, and the entire procedure of union discipline has been made stricter and regulations more definitely defined.

The secretary-treasurer now has the power to take over the property of a defunct local at his discretion. He can choose not to do so, however if liabilities exceed assets. This officer's salary now is listed at $15,000 a year; in the old constitution it is listed at $20,000.

Terms used in the constitution are defined including "unfair," which is not to be construed as meaning fraudulent or dishonest, but merely an attitude of refusal by an employer to comply with conditions upon which union men consent to remain in his employ. Here again the International had the courts in mind.

SECTIONAL LABOR PROBLEMS AIRED

The "strikes" and "road calls" sections remain the same except that the word "radical" is removal.

The purpose of the Alliance is now stated: to achieve improvement of social and economic conditions of theatrical workers, to insure maintenance of fair wages, to assure employment of all members in movie and stage industries, and "to secure to ourselves by unity of action such benefits as are rightfully ours, pledging ourselves in all difficulties to accept wise, honorable and conservative mediation, that equity may be maintained."

The by-laws remain substantially the same.

The grievance committee, sitting at the convention as a special body, expelled George Hart, who had held every office in the local at Salem, Mo., except the presidency until the Alliance took it over, and who had "established an enterprising 'ticket' agency to afford a source of revenue." The committee fined Oscar Kleintopf, business manager of the St. Louis Local 143, and suspended him for two years.

Drastic Action Asked

Mr. Browne touched briefly on the west coast studio fight of last winter, and passed on to this conclusion:

"That we have enjoyed more than a measure of success; in fact, contributed a brilliant and lasting chapter to the history of our Alliance, is strongly indicated," he said. "Our organization is now standing on the threshold of permanent prosperity and security. Never in the history of the Alliance have we been in such an excellent position to safeguard our interests. We are riding the crest of power and stability, factors which can prove either advantageous or ruinous, for when or organization attains prestige, or uncommon popularity, it then becomes the target for renewed and redoubled attacks by its employers. The question is whether we shall have positive and judicious, or negative and shallow action."

The convention recommended drastic measures be taken by the incoming board to remedy the Los Angeles non-union situation, and the New England situation, particularly the resistance to the Alliance locals by E. M. Loew and the Lieberman circuits. A general campaign of organization, backed by the International and locals, was recommended as the solution in New England. Representative John F. Gatelee reported that competent attorneys believe the enduring injunctions effective against many locals in the area are not of a kind to prohibit the locals from picketing and distributing literature.

To remedy the difficulties the Alliance is having to maintain union conditions in Toronto studios, the board laid over for the incoming officers a recommendation by vice-president William P. Covert that the Alliance install a mixed studio charter in Montreal.

The board recommended the proposed resolution from E. J. Tracy, assistant coordinator for labor, which endorses the appointment of a coordinator for industrial cooperation. The coordinator would supervise, subject to President Roosevelt's direction, conferences of representatives of industry, labor and consumers for the consideration of the best means of accelerating industrial recovery, of eliminating unemployment, and of maintaining business and labor standards.

The board also recommended suggestions that a separate classification and uniform wage scale be set up for industrial projection, as a method of increasing the popularity of 16 mm. projection in advertising, and of increasing employment for the Alliance. It was pointed out that $350,000 was paid out last year for operators' salaries for this type of work, which was in addition to wages paid stage employees, camera and sound men. The work in no way conflicts with theatrical effort, it was said, and opens up a new source of employment. "Local unions can, because it still is in the experimental stage, do much to encourage the development of this form of advertising."

SELZNICK, CHAPLIN WIN LEAGUE AWARDS

David O. Selznick, president of Selznick International, has been awarded the 1936 Gold Medal for his production of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" by the Motion Picture Division of the League of Nations at Geneva. As a result of the award, special showings of the picture will be sponsored by the league at Geneva, Paris and other European capitals.

The award was decided by the unanimous vote of the 52 member nations on the committee. At the same time the committee confirmed the award of an extraordinary distinction, a special gold medal, to Charles Chaplin, "in honor of the greatest personality of the art of the cinema," which it announced a few months ago.

The board unanimously endorsed "Labor's Non-Partisan League," a national committee recommended by George L. Berry, president of the International Printing Pressmen and Assistants' Union, which has for its purpose the advancement of Franklin D. Roosevelt for reelection.

The board laid over for consideration later a proposal by Edward T. Stewart, Local 306, for a survey of booth fires; data on fire losses, personal injuries, etc., for the period from 1933 to date, to be used by locals endeavoring to obtain two-men-in-a-booth legislation. The survey would be similar to that conducted prior to the motion picture code of the NRA.

Want Television Charter

Thirty-three members of Local 306 want a television charter. Referred to incoming board. The Cheyenne, Wyo. local wanted jurisdiction of all houses in Wyoming and several in Montana and Utah in order to line up all Fox theaters in the area under a blanket agreement. The board turned down the petition. It declined to revoke four Saskatchewan, Canada, charters for locals there which want to unify local organizations in the prairie provinces.

Theatrical Wardrobe Attendants Locals Numbers 16770, 17298 and 17982 asked for affiliation with International. The matter was referred to the general IATSE office, but the board advocated cooperation of all Alliance locals with these bodies. The Theater Artists and Lobby Display Workers of Fort Worth, Tex., wanted a charter of affiliation, but no action was taken. Action was put by for the time also on the application for affiliation filed by the Associated Assistant Directors of the Motion Picture Industry, a present affiliate of the American Federation of Labor.

Little doubt that labor, including theatrical and motion picture labor, very strongly and actively dislikes the U. S. Supreme Court's labor decisions of late, existed after William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, finished addressing the delegates.

The IATSE wound up the five-day convention by unanimously reelecting the entire official family and extending their terms from two years to four years.

The only changes in the official lineup are Manus McCaffrey for Thomas E. Maloy on the delegates to the American Federation of Labor conventions, and Harry Pearson, Vancouver, for Norman Code as delegate to the Dominion Trades and Labor Congress.

The convention entrusted to the administration the responsibility for unionization of 9,000 theatres in the United States, revealed by a federal survey to be non-union.

Although all action in the matter was referred to the incoming board, Mr. Browne was empowered to appoint a committee of three to investigate, and the board was empowered to proceed with, a plan for pensions and hospitalization.

The resolution suggested that the number of members eligible to retirement and hospitalization each year be investigated; rules, regulations and classifications of applicants drafted; the cost determined; an attempt to secure federal aid be undertaken, and that the setting up, financing and governing of such a plan be undertaken by the board. One resolution suggested retirement at 62 for members of 30 years membership or who are incapacitated for a year or more; a 25 cent weekly premium from each working member; setting aside of half the premiums for a reserve to accumulate fifteen years, etc. The pension would be effective one year from establishment, would carry a maximum monthly payment of $60. One resolution estimated that a minimum of $200,000 a year would be collected through the 25-cent premiums.

Seek Government Action

The Alliance objects to non-Alliance operators in theatres at government institutions and military bases, and the general office of the Alliance was authorized to take up the matter with Government agencies and officials in Washington in an attempt to have IATSE men required in such houses. The Naval Air Station theater at Pensacola, Fla., was mentioned particularly.

The convention also empowered Mr. Browne to investigate the feasibility of introducing in Congress a bill which would include motion picture operators employed in the government service under the Civil Service Act.

The general office will take up the convention's recommendation that a campaign be instituted to unionize "the many outlying small and unfair and non-union theaters in the jurisdiction of small unions. Locals in cities of 50,000 or less are said to be willing to finance such a campaign.

The Alliance was asked by the grievance committee to demand more cooperation from Actors' Equity in the case of summer stock actors who do not refuse to work when IA men are not used.

Drastic action similar to that used against the west coast studios was recommended for "cleaning up" the conditions in western Canada. The recommendation that the contract of Local 360, Edmonton, Alberta, be cancelled due to dual activities, was referred to the incoming board.

The question of creating a new district of Oklahoma and Arkansas was left to the board.

JAPANESE EDICT TO RAISE KOREA QUOTA

Effective in 1937, New Quota Will Give Japanese Product More Than Half Screen Time

by CHIKUSHI TANI
in Tokio

The present cinema control plan, which has been in force in Korea since last year, stipulates that one-third of the pictures contained in one program must absolutely be Japanese product. Commencing January 1, 1937, this ratio shall be revised from one-third to more than one-half. In other words, every program, even those of theatres playing foreign pictures only, has, from the next year on, to include one-half Japanese pictures.

This control is reported, of course, to be based on policies of Korean administration and culture, but the result possible accruing therefrom is greatly feared by foreign picture distributors as causing an enormous loss to them. Objections, then, were raised by various foreign film distributing firms recently, and conferences have repeatedly been held at Keijo in attempt to obtain some neutralizing measures from the government.

In addition, the Korean filmgoing public, being unable to keep silent, out of their vehement craving for foreign pictures, have now shown their readiness to identify themselves with such distributing parties, with a view to blocking the move.

Distributors Oppose Move

Thus, the foreign picture distributors at Keijo, Korea, have now started a positive movement for mitigation of the government's move, alleging it to be much too premature, and insisting that its enforcement should be postponed until the time is generally thought fit, viewed from various angles of motion picture situation in Korea.

In this connection, however, people's opinions are that although restriction of foreign product is reasonable to some extent from the point of view of national politics, efforts should rather be made for the substantial elevation of the quality of Japanese pictures before elimination of foreign ones is contemplated through establishment of ordinances.

Not only in Korea, but also in Japan, ventures with similar purposes were reported in recent years as inevitable steps to protect the Japanese motion picture market from being encroached upon by foreign pictures, but in view of the fact that no such move has so far been carried into practical effect with theatres in Japan, it appears that there is something infeasible in the actual realization of such attempts to exclude the foreign product from the Japan market.

Seeks Abolition of Tax

Seizing the occasion of the Diet in session, Mr. K. Mayeda, elected M. P. for the first time as a spokesman in the interests of the motion picture industry, has been for these several days fighting for abolition of the exhibition tax, which he pointed out to have been left without actual enactment of rules by the taxation system inquiry committee of the Congress which met May 19.

The bill for abolition of the exhibition tax was carried to both Houses last spring, as well as another on the transfer of the same into business tax. Since then the bill has been held ready to be put into force at any time subject to promulgation of the Imperial ordinance. In response to the ardent follow-up of Mr. Mayeda for government's immediate execution of the bill, the authorities concerned explained that its delay of enforcement had been due to the problems at issue in connection with transfer of local taxes and of possible support from the central government.

As, however, it has already been decided at the past session of the Diet that regardless of what may happen on these side issues, the decision then reached in regard to the exhibition tax and its transfer to business tax should be carried into enforcement, Mr. Mayeda pressed the government very hard for it, and was finally given their word that they will immediately initiate practical arrangement to enforce the decision.

Depression Hits Box Office

The total attendance as of January to December, 1935, in Japan proper, exclusive of Korea, is reported 229,965,833, showing a decrease of 14,423,803, as compared with that given for 1934, according to investigations made by the Home Office. Classifying this total by adult and juvenile, 179,141,449 were adults and the remaining 50,824,384 were juveniles, a decrease of 10,261,643 adults and 4,162,160 juveniles.

Obvious from the above figures is the depression which Japan's exhibition field faced in the past year, as, inversely to the decrease in the number of attendants, the past year saw rather a considerable increase in the number of theatres throughout this country. Rating the population of Japan proper to be 70,000,000, in round numbers, it will be seen that each Japanese goes to the movies only 3.28 times a year.

New Censorship Rules

Since November last year, new censorship regulations have been put in force by the Home Office on the Japanese export pictures. While the institution of the regulations is, no doubt, for the purpose of national control of Japanese pictures to be exported for foreign audiences, very little of progress or positive development has so far been made in the actual production of such pictures.

The impression gains ground that this item does not necessarily justify the enactment of rules which, as a matter of fact, should be the subject of vital importance to Japan's motion picture industry. The number of applications made hitherto for censorship on the export pictures has now exceeded 300 which the Home Office had anticipated to reach at the outset; the average monthly number of applications made in recent months is reported around 100.

Further analysis of the destinations our so-called export pictures are bound for reveals that 80% of them are for Hawaii and California, 15% for South America and the remaining 5% for the audiences in Manchuria. Each of them has been produced only for the Japanest residents at these overseas districts. In this light, it can be said that not more than one or two scenic pictures has yet been made in a month in this country, insofar as the export picture is concerned; in other words, beyond what is called the scenic and narrative short subject, no picture for export has yet been produced in this country that claims to be the real feature length production for foreign audiences.

Meantime, the applicants for censorship on those export pictures do not include such large film-producing companies as Shochiku, Nikkatsu, or P.C.L., but most of them so far reported have been private individuals. Even viewed from this point, it may be inferred that the Japanese motion picture industry is less interested in the export picture in its true sense than it was originally expected to be.

Mr. Tajima, Home Office censor, is quoted as saying that although the increasing number of applicants for censorship on export pictures is acceptable, the fact that there are almost no applications yet for censorship of pictures, in the real sense, for foreign audiences, indicates that the Japanese product has not reached standard held by foreign pictures.

First Film Congressman

In the recent nationwide election of members to the House of Representatives the motion picture industry sent its first congressman to parliament, Mr. Kosaku Maeda, who has had long years of direct and indirect part in the development of the Japanese motion picture. He is now working hard to render further efforts to the progress of the industry along all fields.

In view of the fact that there has so far been no censorship of motion pictures at customs houses of Manchukuo, into which they had been imported through Shankaikan, Dairen, Antung, Manchuli and several other places, this issue is now being keenly discussed among people of the Manchukuo government. In the meantome, regarding those pictures played in Manchukuo, 80% of them are imported through Shanghai and 20% from Japan and the U. S. Accordingly, almost all pictures seen by Manchukuo people are the Chinese product coming from Shanghai. The authorities concerned are now trying to establish a regular rule whereby such pictures shall be controlled uniformly.

Cameramen Form Association

While the Nippin Eiga Kantoku Yyokai (The Japan Cinema Directors' Association) is trying to organize further into a foundational juridicial entity, the Cameramen's Association, including cameramen of various film producing companies of Japan, ras recently initiated an effort to enlarge its present organization to greater scale with the possible new title of Japan Association of Motion Picture Technicians.

The enlarged association is reported to include as its members not only cameramen, but developing and sound recording engineers, and the membership is now reported to be held by more than 200 associates. The members exchange correspondence with fellow engineers of foreign countries, and study color and sound pictures.

Youth Committee Reports Films Favorable Influence

Gives Statistics on Juvenile Attendance, Tendencies and Preferences

Things are quite all right with the movies in New Canaan, Conn., and the youth of that considerable and considerate community is not going to the dogs even though the members of the senior class of the New Canaan High School do attend the cinema once a week and would improve that average if they could afford it. This is official. A sub-committee of the Youth Committee appointed under the Survey of Human Needs inaugurated by the Board of Public Welfare vouches for it. A summary of the subcommittee's observations abutts this column on your right.

What the Subcommittee Learned About Youth

1. The motion picture must be considered legitimate recreation for youth as well as adults.
2. The motion picture, together with the radio and the printed page, is largely responsible for the intellectual and emotional life of our people today.
3. There is a need of the development of a study of the appreciation and evaluation of the motion picture that our youth may have guidance in the choice of the pictures which are accessible to them. A need for such study has prompted the state departments of education of seven states to provide such guidance, and has also numerous clubs and churches, the most outstanding being the Catholic Church with its "White List."
4. The motion picture industry, in response to a demand for wholesome pictures, together with the encouragement given them by the success of such pictures as "Little Women," "David Copperfield," "A Tale of Two Cities" and others of like calibre, has made notable progress in providing noteworthy dramatizations of famous classics.
5. The committee is of the conviction that the movies provide much of an educational nature which is helpful in giving our young people a broad education. The news reel and the travelogue make a greater educational contribution than do other types of films.
6. No picture witnessed by the committee was considered objectionable for the consumption of the youth of the town. The educational elements and the clean, wholesome entertainment which the pictures seen have provided materially to outweigh the comparatively few objectionable features.
7. The conduct of the young people attending the pictures was orderly and attentive.
8. The committee believes the Playhouse of New Canaan is proving suitable entertainment for the young people who attend its programs.

The report of the subcommittee, submitted May 29th, is based upon the members' study of 32 motion pictures exhibited at the New Canaan Playhouse in two months and upon a consideration of questionnaires distributed among and returned by members of the senior class of the local High School. Prefatory to filing its summation, the members of the committee took occasion to remark:

"It is impossible to measure the influence which movies have upon those who see them, owing to the fact that no one can definitely tell where the influence of the movies begins and where it stops. We are all aware of the fact that reactions are the combined result of home training, religious instructions, social contacts, newspaper and magazine reading, the reading of books, instruction in school, as well as impressions gained from the radio."

Treading less cautiously, the members of the senior class gave blunt answers and named names. For one, Mae West's, whose pictures one-half of the June graduates declared unfit for the Junior High School children to see. For three more, "Mutiny on the Bounty," "A Tale of Two Cities" and "David Copperfield," named in that order as best among 46 pictures listed as choices of the student body.

The students attend the Playhouse (New Canaan's principal cinema) on an average of once a week and half of them buy their tickets with money they have earned. One-third of them prefer to go alone, another one-third make a "date" of it and the rest are not particular. Parents of one-sixth of them say they think the young people go to the movies more often than they should, but half of the youngsters say they would go twice as often if they could afford it.

Half of the students frequently sit through a picture the second time over and the questionnaires revealed that twelve pictures had been honored by return visits of from one to eight of them. "Naughty Marietta," "One Night of Love" and "Captain Blood" are three pictures that affected the young people that way.

Like their elders and juniors, the members of the senior class were a bit vague when put to it to tell why they chose one picture in preference to another for that weekly visit to the theatre. The members of the subcommittee cover the matter in this fashion:

"Three factors are about equal in determining the selection of pictures. These are, magazine and newspaper criticism, a desire to see a certain player or players regardless of the picture presented, and word of mouth advertising. A slightly smaller portion depend upon prevues, though only about one-half of those who depend upon the prevues feel that they are a reliable guide. Comparatively few of the students depend upon advertisements displayed in front of the theatre.

"Of those who depend upon word of mouth advertising, approximately one-third derive such information from their fellow students. About 10 per cent attend some movies on the recommendation of their teachers and five per cent follow the combined advice of parents and church. About two-thirds of the members of the class do not regularly read movie magazines. Only 8 per cent are interested enough to show a willingness to spend their own money to purchase them."

Three-fourths of the students said movies had aided them in their understanding of history. Ninety per cent were interested in sports subjects, 75 per cent in animated cartoons, 70 per cent in travelogues and 50 per cent in mystery and detective stories. Half of them believe pictures presenting a display of firearms are detrimental to smaller children.

Among the players, Robert Taylor and Myrna Loy led all the rest in the class balloting.

Membership of the subcommittee duplicated membership of the subcommittee on radio and the motion picture gives pretty good account of itself in the report of that committee, too. Explorations prompted the following statistics:

"Sixty-one per cent prefer movie attendance to reading or listening to the radio. Twenty-six per cent prefer listening to the radio to reading or movie attendance. Thirteen per cent prefer reading to listening to the radio or movie attendance."

As in the case of the report on motion pictures, the senior class of the New Canaan High School served the committee as guinea pig.

UNIVERSAL HAS POSSIBLE 2-COLOR COMPETITOR FOR TECHNICOLOR

Company Claims Colored Newsreels Can Be Placed in Theatres in Six Hours; Tests Now Are Underway

A new color process, said to be a radical departure from others now used in Hollywood and reported to solve the problem of cost and time in turning out finished prints, is being tested by Universal Pictures Corporation with a view to developing potential competition to Technicolor.

While present experiments with the process, owned by the Telco Corporation of Hollywood, are said to have proved it effective for two-color printing, under certain conditions it can be used for three-color, according to Universal, which is understood to have financed the inventors, Robert Hoyt and Leon Ungar.

Universal's interest in Telco will depend on further tests now underway, though experiments already completed led a high Universal executive this week to say that it appeared "very promising."

An experimental newsreel made by Universal News of the opening of the Texas Centennial in Dallas on Saturday was said to have demonstrated that Telco films can be taken, printed and projected on a theatre screen in six hours. Charles Ford, Universal News editor, said that Telco is four times as fast as any other color process, and one-half as expensive as other two-color methods on the market. Word from the Coast is that Telco cuts the cost of color production to approximately the same level as black-and-white.

Time Called Fastest Ever

In the Dallas experiment color photography was developed and screened in a theatre in the fastest time ever achieved, it was claimed, and it was called the first time that a newsreel in color was released simultaneously with films of the same scenes in black-and-white. The pictures, 350 feet in length, were shown at the Majestic theatre in Dallas. Universal plans to film a two-reel subject on the Centennial in Telco, to be released as "Cavalcade of Texas."

While Universal is secretive about its "find," the inventors have divulged that it can produce any color, including natural skin tints, which is most difficult for a color camera, and that it can take any pictures under any light strong enough for black-and-white photography.

One Negative and Multiple Lenses

Of the several color methods on the market, Technicolor is the only perfected three-color method which has gained a firm hold. As distinct from Technicolor, which makes use of two or three negatives in the photography, Telco requires one negative and multiple lenses.

The inventors were said to have discovered the color process while seeking to develop a third-dimension film method. They attacked color photography through the lens instead of the film.

They explained the Telco process as follows: A green filter and red filter lens are matched in a camera, side by side, the color elements thus being filtered out and registered on the single negative. The colors are registered from the negative onto a double emulsion film, the red elements on one side and the blue-green on the other. The double emulsion film is given a color dye process. In projection, the tints are blended by the light rays.

While Universal is putting the process through severe tests, its possibilities will not be fully apparent until a special laboratory is built, the company said.

Burroughs-Tarzan Discovery

Meanwhile, Burroughs Tarzan Pictures, Inc., this week claimed to have solved "one of the most perplexing problems in connection with effects in color photography."

Because of the necessity of using two and three negatives in shooting color sequences, producers and laboratories have encountered a stumbling block in the creation of perfect montage shots, intricate swipes, fades and dissolves in color pictures. By a secret process, the company's technical staff now claims to have produced these transformations with the same effectiveness as has been employed in black-and-white photography.

The process is being patented by the Cinecolor Laboratory in Hollywood, with exclusive use assigned to Burroughs Tarzan Pictures, according to an announcement.

U.S. Department Has New Protest

Noah Bloomer, operator of the Rex and Ritz theatres at Belleville, Ill., says he has filed a complaint with the Department of Justice in Washington charging that he cannot get film from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Paramount, Twentieth Century-Fox and United Artists since Fox Midwest took over the Lincoln and Washington theatres.

Mr. Bloomer says he is getting second runs of Warner, First National, RKO and independent film.

William F. Rodgers, general sales manager for MGM, and Paul Lazarus of United Artists, however, denied any knowledge of a complaint from Mr. Bloomer.

Salt Lake Offices Moving

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Sheffield-Republic and Twentieth Century-Fox exchanges in Salt Lake City are moving into larger quarters. MGM is expected to be quartered in new and larger space on the extreme east end of Film Row, with the move scheduled for the fall. Sheffield-Republic will move next week into larger quarters immediately adjoining the present offices and Twentieth Century-Fox's offices will be considerably enlarged.

Warners Announce 140 Short Subjects At Chicago Meet

Warner Brothers' 1936-37 sales meeting activities were concluded this week in Chicago where the midwest forces heard a reiteration of the program of 60 features announced in New York two weeks ago, and, in addition, were told that the corporation in 1936-37 would have on its short subject schedule some 140 one and two-reel Vitaphones.

The announcement of the short subject was made by Sam Sax, production executive of the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio, and Norman H. Moray, Vitaphone executive in charge of shorts and trailers. The total of 140 this year represents an increase of 10 subjects over the previous three years' program, and includes 36 two-reel subjects and 104 single reels, as compared with 52 two-reelers, and 78 single reels released last year.

One hundred subjects will be made under Mr. Sax at the Brooklyn plant, with six to be produced at the Warners plant at Burbank, Cal. In addition there will be 34 cartoons by Leon Schlesinger, also made in Hollywood.

There will be eight series of short subjects: 36 two-reel Broadway Brevities, 18 one-reel Melody Masters, 13 one-reel Vitaphone Novelties, 13 one-reel Vitaphone Vaudeville subjects, 13 one-reel Pictorial Reviews, 18 Merry Melody three-color cartoons, 16 black and white Looney Tunes, 13 E. M. Newman Color-Tour Adventures. The six two-reelers to be made on the Coast will be Broadway Brevities in Technicolor.

Jack L. Warner by phone from Hollywood said the production problem now rests in "getting stories big enough to warrant the making of super-budgeted pictures." Major Albert Warner said the new product is "so good it ought to be released over an 18-month period instead of 12." S. Charles Einfeld declared the newspaper and trade paper advertising budget will be increased by 40 per cent.

The sessions were presided over by Gradwell L. Sears, western and southern general sales manager. Those attending from the home office included Albert Warner, A. W. Smith, Jr., S. Charles Einfeld, Harold S. Bareford, A. W. Schwalberg, Ed Selzer, Arthur Sachson, H. M. Doherty and Rudy Hagen. Southern and western branch managers present included H. J. Ochs, Atlanta; R. L. McCoy, Charlotte; W. E. Callaway, Dallas; Byron Adams, Memphis; L. Conner, New Orleans; J. O. Rhode, Oklahoma City; Leo Blank, Chicago; T. Gillian, Chicago; E. J. Tilton, Des Moines; William Warner, Kansas City; R. T. Smith, Milwaukee; Rud Lohrenz, Minneapolis; C. K. Olson, Omaha and Hall Walsh, St. Louis.

PROTESTS AGAINST CHANCE GAMES GROW STRONGER; CHURCHES JOIN

Executive Committee of Federal Council of Churches Says Practice "Feeds Gambling Craze", Promotes "Cheap Features"

Affiliated Enterprises Convention at Denver Is Told 4,000 Theatres Are Using This Form of Games

Probably no other exhibition practice, including double bills, ever developed as much controversy as that which is raging today over chance games, in the courts, in municipal and state legislatures, among public groups and within the industry itself. There is hardly a state in the Union where the practice, as used for socalled box office "stimulation," is not the target of opposition. Yet some 4,000 theatres now are using the "Bank Night" type alone.

One of the loudest complaints ever voiced against "Bank Night" came this week from the New York convention halls of the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, which, speaking for 23 national religious denominations of the Protestant faith and embracing a combined membership of some 22,000,000 communicants, roundly scored the practice, because, in neighborhood theatres especially, it "not only feeds the craze for gambling, but tends to the use of cheap features instead of the more desirable pictures."

Entirely out of hearing of the loud outburst by the Federal Council, the office, sales and field forces of Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., owners of Bank Night, at the same time were holding their first national convention in Denver, Col. Those who attended included: Frank Reynolds, Denver; B. L. Dudenhofer, New Orleans; Hal Grabow, Denver; J. S. Jossey, Cleveland; Able Davis, Salt Lake; Harriet Eby, Denver; Lloyd Dricker, Denver; Viette Koernig, Denver; Earl W. Penrod, Indianapolis; Thelma Crandall, Denver; M. L. Stern, Omaha; J. L. Stern, Minneapolis; Violet Uppling, Denver; R. W. McEwan, Kansas City; J. E. McKean, St. Louis; A. G. Edwards, Denver; Ray Coffin, Des Moines; Rick Ricketson, Denver, Fox Theatre division manager, and Charles U. Yaeger, Denver, president of Affiliated Enterprises.

A. J. England, Pittsburgh; Betty Austin, Denver; Emmett Thurmon, Denver, company counsel; Harry Smythe, Chicago; Claude C. Ezell, Dallas, general sales manager; L. R. Bach, Denver; Virginia Nichols, Denver; Joe Goetz, Milwaukee; B. F. Busby, Little Rock; W. G. Underwood; Anna Marie Dolphin; Otis Johnston, Denver; Ray Olmstead, Los Angeles; C. B. Milton, San Francisco; Aline Kirk, Denver; Oscar Oldknow, Los Angeles, district manager for National Theatre Supply; Ray Heffner, Boston; Eddie Goldstein, New York; Foster McSwain, Aida, Okla.; Dan Roberts, Atlanta; Alec Alexander, Charlotte, N. C.; Ralph Whittaker, Denver; Tony Archer, Denver, theatre operator; Dave Davis, Denver; and Joe Dekker, Denver, theatre operator.

Yaeger Is Made Texas Ranger

During the proceedings, Charles Yaeger, president, was made a Texas Ranger by a special commission brought by Claude Ezell, sales manager for the company.

The convention, which lasted three days, was highlighted by a luncheon, attended by more than 200 salesmen, exhibitors and distributors, and a day's outing at Colorado Springs.

Charles Urban Yaeger, with the Texas Ranger hat, originator of Bank Night and president of Affiliated Enterprises, Inc., owners of Bank Night; and Frank H. ("Rick") Ricketson, manager of the Intermountain division for Fox West Coast Theatres.

At the luncheon it was revealed that over 4,000 theatres in this country are now using the Bank Night idea.

Taking its cue from the Affiliated Enterprises meeting, America's giveaway and premium dealers evidently feel that they, too, are in need of a convention, and so the Atlantic Coast Premium Exposition will be held from September 28th to October 2d at the Hotel Astor in New York, under the auspices of the Premium Advertising Association, Howard Dunk, secretary.

Protest Charles Chase Comedy

Affiliated Enterprises is negotiating to halt the showing of the Charles Chase comedy "Neighborhood House," which was produced by Hal Roach and is scheduled for MGM release. The film concerns Bank Night, and Affiliated claims that the showing of it would cast "irreparable reflections" and do damage to the chance game plan.

According to Emmet Thurman, Affiliated attorney, the story of the film shows several attempts to defraud theatres using the plan, and might leave such ideas in the minds of theatre patrons. The film was originally titled "Bank Night," but was changed at the request of Affiliated, it is understood.

Asked for a legal opinion on the insuring of Bank Nights, the Louisiana state insurance department this week quote a decision of the state of Indiana as follows: "Commissioner McClain has ordered discontinuance of certificates that have been put out by certain motion picture theatres 'guaranteeing' the payment of the awards to absentees whose numbers might be drawn on 'Bank Night.' The literature also referred to its plan as 'theatre bank night insurance.' When it came to the commissioner's attention several weeks ago he constructed it as an infraction of the state's insurance code and put the question up to Attorney-General Lutz, who holds the certificates as worded 'affirmatively show that they intend to insure' and 'the advertisement is evidence that such certificates are sold and considered by the vendor to be insurance.' The order of the commissioner does not bar 'bank nights' as such but only where they issue certificates 'guaranteeing' or 'insuring' payment of awards under certain conditions.

And in several of the states proponents and opponents of the plan were busily engaged in fighting the issue.

Chance Game Opens Theatre

"Screeno Every Night" is the catchline under which the President theatre in San Francisco will operate when it opens this month. Rene T. LaMarre will manage the house for Lawrence Borg and Irving Ackerman, and its policy will be double bills daily.

In Colorado, two Denver managers were named in charges filed in court alleging that they operated a lottery. The men, Willie Chin and Roy Wennberg, who operated the Sun, were named with six others who operated a pool hall and a dance hall. The theatre men are charged with selling tickets entitling the holder to a chance on a $500 cash prize.

Down in Georgia, Joseph Jorman, operator of a theatre in LaGrange, who was fined $250 and given a six months suspended sentence on the chain gang on a Bank Night lottery charge, has filed a motion for a new trial. Judge W. T. Tuggle set the hearing for July 16th. The Lam Amusement Company, employers of Mr. Jorman, said the appeal will be taken to the highest courts if necessary.

Bill Introduced in Louisiana

The bill introduced into the legislature in Louisiana to prohibit Bank Night as a lottery in that state has caused many a broad smile in some sections of New Orleans and a bit of half-suppressed ire in others. Gambling isn't exactly prohibited in the Crescent City, for on some portions of St. Charles and Royal Streets passersby are invited in to "buck the tiger." In other sections the system is more dignified. Customers walk in without an invitation.

With the opposition of Allied in Michigan out of the way, cash giveaways appear to be in for another tussle in Detroit theatres. Allied's board of directors last week came to an understanding that he organization would withdraw from the fight to keep them out of the Detroit houses, certain members feeling that they needed the games to combat Cooperative's buying power and circuit competition.

James McKoy, Goldsboro, N. C., operator, has been indicted by the Wayne County grand jury on charges of operating a lottery in connection with Cash Night awards at his house.

Judge A. L. Luebbers, in municipal court of Cincinnati, this week fined Thomas Reilly, owner of the Rialto, $50 and costs for operating Sweepstakes. The fine was suspended. The games has been declared legal in other Ohio situations, however.

Country Stores conducted in suburban theatres are not lotteries in the opinion of Judge Woodley in Portland, Ore., on the ground that the holders of the tickets do not pay a valuable consideration for a chance to win a prize.

U.S. LAUNCHES HEARINGS TO "BRIDLE" TELEVISION

Federal Communications Group Starts Sessions in Capital To Control the Medium in Its Relations with Films, Radio

Television may or may not be "just around the corner," but, regardless of where it is, the United States Government this week set out to determine how and when —if at all—the new medium will act as a competitor of the motion picture, the radio and the press. From this effort the Government expects to evolve formal regulations governing television's conduct in the future, and with this thought in mind, the Federal Communications Commission, on Monday, started at Washington a series of conferences and discussions with leaders of each of the four fields of entertainment and public expression. The commissioners heard, among other things—not all of them pertaining to television—that:

1. "Televison will supplement, but will not supplant other forms of entertainment."—David Sarnoff.

2. "The American public today has a $3,000,000,000 investment in its own home radio receiving apparatus."—Radio Corporation of America.

3. "Television may give films a boost."—James M. Skinner, Philco Radio.

4. "The public has been mulcted of $50,000,000 by the Radio Corporation of America."—Samuel Darby, Jr., "minority interests' " lawyer.

5. "Columbia Broadcasting System is getting ready for television."—William S. Paley.

6. The motion picture is asking the Government for television privileges.

And while those of radio and television were saying their pieces for the edification of the commissioners, the motion picture business was virtually resting on the recent findings of its own Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, which, after studying for one year the future possible relations of television to the motion picture, reported back to the industry that:

1. There is no danger that television will burst unexpectedly on an unprepared motion picture industry, either psychologically or technically.

2. Hundreds of millions of dollars must still be expended before there is any nationwide exploitation of television.

3. There is a possibility of a national television development starting in 1937, more probably in 1938.

4. There is as yet no promise of the enlargement of the television picture to theatre screen size.

5. Television service for rural districts is far from realization.

6. The motion picture will continue to watch the pioneering attempts to make television a commercial reality, and will receive reports as progress occurs.

Assignment of four frequencies for motion picture television or radio service has been recommended by Twentieth Century-Fox, according to a schedule of recommendations made public by the Commission at the beginning of the hearings this week.

The use of one frequency in each of four of the short-wave bands was suggested by the company as desirable for the film industry. By providing four frequencies widely separated, it would be possible for a number of film companies to operate radio simultaneously without undue interference.

Radio Executive Sees Film Stimulus

Far from becoming a menace to the motion picture industry, television may give films a boost, in the opinion of James M. Skinner, president of the Philadelphia Storage Battery Company, manufacturers of Philco radios, and chairman of the special television committee of the Radio Manufacturers' Association, who was one of the first to testify on television.

"Television and the movies should not, in the opinion of the Radio Manufacturers, be serious competitors," he told the commission. "Television will never supplant the movies.

"Of course it may be argued that some people may stay home to see a news or sporting event or a play rather than go out to the movies. But, as in the case of radio broadcasting, the stimulation of the public mind to greater interest in wider fields should encourage their greater attendance in person at the movies, sporting events, or theatre.

"Furthermore, the gregarious instinct of the human race to gather in crowds is fundamental and will never be changed by television or anything else.

"It is likely also that television will depend to a very large degree on the movie and talkie producers for the production of films for television broadcasting. The required technique is the same."

Seen as Supplemental

Television, the Philco executive said, will not be broadcast over the long hours that sound radio is transmitted today. Both because of the cost feature, for some years at least, and because of the tiring concentration that will be required, television is seen by leaders in the radio industry as supplemental to sound broadcasting. Therefore, he pointed out, sound and television will not be competitors.

"It is wholly unlikely that television will be used anything like the number of hours per day that sound radio is used," he added. "Sound radio is used, not only as a primary source of entertainment and education, but also as a background while reading, resting, working or playing bridge. Looking at television requires concentration. Television in too large doses would be tiring. However, the addition of daily television programs at certain hours, covering perhaps news events, sports events, playlets, skits, etc., should be a very important and significant addition to the home life of the American people."

Public Has $3,000,000,000 Invested in Own Home Receiving Apparatus, Says Sarnoff at Washington Conference

Royalty Charges Denounced

Charges that the public has been "mulcted" of $50,000,000 by the Radio Corporation of America through its royalty system were made to the Commission by Samuel E. Darby, Jr., representing 11 independent receiving set manufacturers.

Mr. Darby expressed fears that when television is marketed a heavy tribute will be demanded by RCA, "although RCA may not actually own a patent that bears directly on television."

Called for the purpose of providing information for the guidance of the Commission, especially in its proposed new assignment of frequency bands for the various air services, the hearings at first are to be devoted to technical matters, but will be followed by further hearings at which economic and other details of television, broadcasting and other forms of radio service will be discussed.

The hearings this week were devoted to a more or less general discussion of the frequency situation, in the course of which T. A. M. Craven, chief engineer of the Commission, indicated the belief that hundreds of thousands of frequency eventually will be available as science conquers the problems which now make operation above 30,000 kilocycles difficult. Eventually, he said, there is a possibility that frequencies up to 10,000,000 kilocycles may be made available.

Sarnoff Urges Caution

The belief that television is not destined to eliminate other forms of entertainment was voiced by David Sarnoff, president of the Radio Corporation of America, who joined with other industrial leaders in urging the Commission to make no hard and fast allocations of television frequencies, but so to arrange its assignments as to permit changes should future development make such action necessary.

"Technically, television is an accomplished fact," Mr. Sarnoff told the Commission, "although it is not yet ready commercially."

"The television which is assuming shape in our laboratories will not, as many persons assume without warrant, replace sound broadcasting," he continued. "The present sound broadcasting service will proceed without interruption. Television must find new functions, new entertainment and new programs.

"As soon as television has been brought to a point of practical service it will be made available to the American people."

Figures cited by the head of RCA to show how thoroughly broadcasting has penetrated the national consciousness indicated that the American public has invested more than $3,000,000,000 in receiving apparatus, or ten times as much as the investment in broadcasting stations and radio manufacturing plants.

Frequency Allocation a Problem

The present series of hearings, which are expected to continue well into July, will develop information as to what users of the various radio services believe should be done in the way of allocating frequencies, in the course of which the radio communication problems of the motion picture industry will be discussed by E. H. Hansen, of Twentieth Century-Fox, representing the Research Council of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

The determination to investigate the frequency situation at this time, it was explained by Mr. Craven, is due to the imminence of three important events which engineers believe may affect the radio industry as a whole.

"The first," he said, "is the fact that certain government departments feel that they have sufficient information with respect to the efficacy of the new portion of the spectrum to invest large sums of money in equipment to be used therein, and are desirous of obtaining allocation of certain frequencies for their exclusive use."

While Mr. Craven did not go into detail as to the government's plans it was indicated that the Army and Navy, watching high frequency developments abroad, particularly in Germany and Italy, where television is being developed for military purposes, are anxious to obtain space on the air in which to initiate similar studies.

Conference in Cairo in 1938

The second important event is the international telecommunications conference to be held in Cairo, Egypt, in 1938, at which the various nations may attempt to come to a new agreement with respect to allocation of frequencies to services, proposals on which must be submitted by participating governments by next November.

"The third event is that recent scientific developments have indicated new uses for radio in new portions of the radio spectrum, and thus it would appear that we might be at the threshold of creating a new and important branch of the radio industry," he said.

Paley Asks Orderly Development

William S. Paley, president of Columbia Broadcasting System, testifying before the Commission, said, "Columbia is getting ready for television. The American people have a right to expect from us a major contribution to the benefits they may derive from television and every other appropriate advance in the technique and the art of broadcasting. I promise such a contribution to them now."

However, Mr. Paley declared, in this period of transition, broadcasting progress must be an orderly development; many uncertainties still are on the horizon; even the television methods now generally known and most talked of in this country may not be those in ultimate use here.

Four Principles Advanced

Mr. Paley pointed to four principles to be followed if a vital broadcasting service to the people is to be assured:

1. "Broadcasting must be kept economically sound, on a firm business footing, particularly in view of the huge investments it must shortly make in new developments, as illustrated by an estimated cost of over $500,000 for just one experimental television station.

2. "The principle of competition in the industry must be adhered to, in order to assure the public a constantly improving service, advancing as in the past.

3. "The principle already recommended by the Commission's own engineering staff —experimentation and orderly evolution— must be followed, in order to make the most of the new technical developments and avoid possibly disastrous mistakes.

4. "The principle of assigning channels only to individuals and organizations of demonstrated responsibility must be observed, in the interests of the whole American people."

Background Data

A parade of experts, technicians, and spokesmen for radio and television industries told of developments as the commission began assembling data which it said would form a background for opening up licensing in a broad field of radio not now touched except for experimental purposes.

Equipment capable of sending newspapers through the air to appear in facsimile on the screen of a receiving set was declared to be already in operation. Still pictures are also being broadcast, it was added.

Perfection of high-frequency, short-wave channels to enable millions to operate their own private broadcasting stations was pictured as a possibility.

In opening the informal hearing, Anning S. Prall, FCC chairman, said it was "practicable from a technical standpoint to print the newspaper in the home today" by facsimile transmission.

Because speed always had been a controlling factor in news, he added, "newspapers might desire to make use of this system" and hence the FCC should plan ahead for the demand.

"Postman" Suit Filed In New York Court

A suit for $100,000 damages charging copyright infringement was filed in New York Supreme Court Tuesday by Casino de Paree Productions, Inc., against Warner Brothers over the manuscript of "The Postman Always Rings Twice." The complaint recites that the plaintiff exhibited the play "The Postman Always Rings Twice" last year and subsequently the defendants produced the picture "The Doorman's Opera," which made use of the material in the play allegedly owned by the plaintiff.

The defendants have entered a denial of the charges and assert that the manuscript of their play was written by A. Darian Otvos and Joseph J. Bennett and rights to the play were properly held by the defendant. The plaintiff asked for an injunction to restrain the defendant from further exhibiting "The Doorman's Opera."

Alien Artists Bill Reported Favorably

A favorable report on legislation to restrict the entry into this country of alien actors and other artists was ordered Tuesday by the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization after representatives of singers had argued for the bill.

The measure was introduced by Representative Dickstein of New York, chairman of the committee. Due to the approaching end of the session, however, it is not anticipated that any steps will be taken to enact the bill into law this year.

File Malfeasance Suit

Action has been filed in the Chancery Court at Wilmington, Del., charging malfeasance in office against four directors of the Wilmington Amusement Company and Topkis-Ginns Theatre Company by the Farmers' Bank of Delaware. The action charges James N. Ginns, Charles Topkis, his wife, Mrs. Vitelia Topkis, and Oscar Ginns with malfeasance in office as officers and directors of the two companies asking their removal.

Autry Pact Upheld

Federal Judge James handed down a decision this week, in Hollywood, favoring Republic Pictures and upholding the order of a superior court in restraining Gene Autry from working at any other studio or making any personal or radio appearance until the completion of his contract with Republic. The contract is for five years dating from July 1 of last year.

Award Franklin $2,500

A verdict for $2,500 was handed down this week in New York Supreme Court by Justice Peter J. Schmuck in connection with the breach of contract action by Sidney Franklin, bullfighter, against the Bray Pictures Corporation.

NEW REGULATIONS ADD TO FRENCH POWER TO HIT AT AMERICAN FILMS

Drastic Provisions Tantamount To Subjecting U. S. Pictures To Jurisdiction of French Government; Start June 30

Attorneys for U. S. Companies Complain of Ambiguity of Provisions, Say They Cover More Ground Than Treaty

Drastic provisions tantamount to subjecting the American picture industry to the jurisdiction of the French Government are contained in the Franco-American double taxation treaty which becomes effective June 30, according to attorneys for film companies, who have concluded a study of the regulations. Thus, in addition to various restrictions in force, the French have in their power a new avenue of hitting at the American industry.

Nevertheless, the principal American picture companies are taking advantage of the new law, as it gives promise of ameliorating certain burdensome phases of the French tax situation, while at the same time fearing that it will operate to increase the tax now paid by their French subsidiaries. The convention is in effect for five years and thereafter until 12 months from the date on which either contracting party gives notice of its termination.

A committee of film company attorneys headed by Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, has made an intensive study of the instructions for the law's application against American companies operating in France, who may accept it at their own discretion.

The instructions were received in New York from Paris early in April, and it was provided that declarations by American companies electing to adopt the new regulations be filed not later than June 30. The film companies found that some of the provisions were so ambiguous that further time would be required for their clarification, and through our embassy at Paris asked for a 90-day extension of the deadline. This was refused, for legal reasons.

Optional to U. S. Companies

The convention distinguishes between French and foreign business, and levies an income tax only on operations in France. Heretofore, because the French officials were unable to determine accurately the extent of an American corporation's business in France, the operations of the American parent company also were included in the calculations.

The new law is optional with American companies, and is applicable also to French operations in the United States. If accepted by an American company, it is subject to the fiscal legislation governing domestic corporations in France.

In addition to ambiguity, film company lawyers charge that the regulations cover more ground than provided in the treaty, which was carried through at the instance of American business, seeking to raise the burden of double taxation.

The law requires American parent companies to submit their books and accounts for examination by the French Government to prove no diversion of profits from French subsidiaries, by overcharging for products or otherwise. Under this procedure, it is feared that the American motion picture companies will be compelled to lay bare practically all details of their operations, including cost of pictures, exhibitor accounts, and other trade secrets.

FRANCE EXPLAINS TAXATION PROBLEM

The federal income tax in the United States and the tax on industrial and commercial profits in France are the levies referred to in the reciprocal double taxation agreement between the two countries, which is the subject of the accompanying article.

Foreign corporations are subject to taxation from the moment they acquire property in France pertaining to their business.

The French Government explained: "No distinction is made regarding the nature of such property corporations which, without having establishment on our territory, engage, however, in activities here (making loans, delivering patents, etc.), (and these) are taxable as well as those which own or operate real property; it is also immaterial whether, in applying the tax, the companies operate themselves their French property or whether they own a share in a French corporation having the same purpose."

Tax Is on Profits

Heretofore, the method of assessing taxes was guesswork, arbitrarily calculated on a basis of French assets in proportion to the total assets of an American company, or business done in France as compared with the total business, regardless of profit or loss. The new law levies the tax directly on profits from French operation, with one-fourth of the profits exempt.

An American film company now will be required to declare the assets and income of its French establishment, and, upon demand, be prepared to show that it has made no attempt to overcharge its subsidiary or branch office in order to show a smaller profit and pay a smaller tax.

Covers All Companies

The law applies to all companies permanently doing business in France. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount, with the largest investments, are chiefly affected, though all major companies, and some independents operating in France, will be subject to the new regulations if they file their acceptance.

The procedure of acceptance is explained in this regulation: "The regime which Article 5 of the convention institutes in favor of American corporations is an optional one. To benefit by it these corporations must submit a declaration to the Registry Office.

"The office competent to receive this declaration is the one charged with collection of taxes due from the corporation concerned.

"The declaration must be submitted within six months after the date on which the convention becomes effective, that is, before July 1, 1936, if it concerns a corporation which already has an establishment in France on January 1, 1936; or in the other case, within six months after the creation of the establishment in France.

"In default of declaration within the period allowed, the company is considered to have chosen the present regime.

"Moreover, the option made for one establishment is valid for all establishments which the company owns in France. An American company which has several establishments in our country consequently cannot place itself under the new regime for one of its establishments and remain under the regime of the Decree of December 6, 1872, for another establishment.

"Finally, the option, once exercised, is irrevocable. The American corporation which has chosen the new regime, no longer has the right to ask, later, to be taxed according to the present procedure of the taxable proportion. Also, the corporation which, by abstaining from submitting a declaration, has chosen the present system of taxation, is not allowed to ask, in the future, for the benefit of the regime provided by the convention.

"The declaration which the American corporation must present in order to profit by the new regime is made on unstamped paper and signed by the qualified representative of the company or by his alternate provided with a regular power-of-attorney; it is filed in the records on the company and note of the deposit is made on the principal register of the office. Besides, the entry opened in the special register of corporations is annotated with a reference to the declaration."

Text of Articles

Following is the text of the articles of the Franco-American double taxation convention, as ratified:

Article I

Enterprises of one of the contracting States are not subject to taxation by the other contracting State in respect of their indusrial and commercial profits except in respect of such profits allocable to their permanent establishments in the latter State.

No account shall be taken in determining the tax in one of the contracting States, of the purchase of merchandise effected therein by an enterprise of the other State for the purpose of supplying establishments maintained by such enterprise in the latter States.

Article II

American enterprises having permanent establishments in France are required to submit to the French fiscal administration the same declarations and the same justifications, with respect to such establishments, as French enterprises.

The French fiscal administration has the right, within the provisions of its national legislation and subject to the measures of appeal provided in such legislation to make such corrections in the declaration of profits realized in France as may be necessary to show the exact amount of such profits.

The same principle applies mutatis mutandis to French enterprises having permanent establishments in the United States.

(Article III pertains to aircraft business.)

Article IV

When an American enterprise, by reason of its participation in the management or capital of a French enterprise, makes or imposes on the latter, in their commercial or financial relations, conditions different from those which would be made with a third enterprise, any profits which should normally have appeared in the balance sheet of the French enterprise, but which have been, in this manner, diverted to the American enterprise, are, subject to the measures of appeal applicable in the case of the tax on industrial and commercial profits, incorporated in the taxable profits of the French enterprise.

The same principle applies mutatis mutandis, in the event that profits are diverted from an American enterprise to a French enterprise.

Article V

American corporations which maintain in France permanent establishments may, in derogation of Article 3 of the Decree of December 6, 1872, elect to pay the tax on income from securities on three-fourths of the profits actually derived from such establishments, the industrial and commercial profits being determined in accordance with Article I.

An American corporation which wishes to place itself under the regime of the preceding paragraph must make a declaration to that effect at the Bureau of Registration within six months after the date upon which this Agreement becomes effective or within six months after the creation of its establishment in France. The election made for one establishment applies to all the establishments of such corporation. Any such election is irrevocable.

Article VI

An American corporation shall not be subject to the obligations prescribed by Article 3 of the Decree of December 6, 1872, by reason of any participation in the management or in the capital of, or any other relations with, a French corporation, if such American corporation and French corporation conform to the requirements of the present article. In such case, the tax on income from securities to be levied in conformity with French legislation, on the dividends, interest and all other products distributed by the French enterprise; but it is moreover eligible, if the occasion arises, and subject to the measures of appeal applicable in the case of the tax on income from securities, on the profits which the American corporation derives from the French corporation under the conditions prescribed in Article IV.

An American corporation which wishes to place itself under the regime of the preceding paragraph must make a declaration to that effect at the Bureau of Registration jointly with the interested French corporation, within six months after the date upon which this Agreement becomes effective, or within six months after the acquisition of the participation or the commencement of the relations of a nature to entail the application of Article 3 of the Decree of December 6, 1872. Any such election is irrevocable.

American corporations which have not made the declaration and which are subjected to the provisions of Article 3 of the Decree of December 6, 1872, shall enjoy the benefits of Articles 27, 28 and 29 of the French law of July 31, 1920, and Article 25 of the French law of March 19, 1928, under the same conditions as French corporations.

Article VII

Compensation paid by one of the contracting States to its citizens for labor or personal services performed in the other State is exempt from tax in the latter State.

Article VIII

War pensions paid by one of the contracting States to persons residing in the territory of the other State are exempt from tax in the latter State.

Article IX

The following classes of income paid in one of the contracting States to a corporation of the other State, or to a citizen of the latter State residing there, are exempt from tax in the former State:

(a) amounts paid as consideration for the right to use patents, secret processes and formulas, trade marks and other analogous rights;

(b) income received as copyright royalties;

(c) private pensions and life annuities.

(Article X pertains to procedure of ratification.)

Goldwyn Leaves Hospital, Returns to Hollywood

Samuel Goldwyn has been discharged from Doctors Hospital in New York where he was operated on for intestinal toxemia which he contracted on his recent arrival from Europe. He leaves for Hollywood next week, following conferences with United Artists officials, to attend the company's sales convention there from June 30 to July 2.

Film Industry Is Still Affected By French Strike

The strike in Paris as it affects the motion picture industry has not reached a settlement. Producers, distributors and exhibitors are holding lengthy meetings with workers and their syndicates. Exchanges and distributors expect the negotiations to lead to the reopening of the studios before the end of the week. The laboratories are still closed.

The strike reached into all branches of the industry, resulting in the closing of the exchanges operated by various American distributing companies as well as those of a number of French organizations. Labor delegates and workers forced a shutdown by invading the offices of the various companies, demanding increases of almost 50 per cent in wages.

60 Are Named to Committee for Laemmle Dinner

A lengthy list of well known men, in and out of the industry, constitute the committee making arrangements for the dinner to Carl Laemmle at the Hotel Waldorf, in New York, June 22. AT UNIVERSAL'S SALES CONVENTION IN NEW YORK WITH 200 FROM 37 EXCHANGES ATTENDING

Policy of Non-Interference with Studio Is Emphasized by Cowdin and Cochrane at Meeting with Sales Staff

With the statement that there was "complete harmony and understanding between the studio and sales department," Robert H. Cochrane, president, opened the Universal Pictures annual sales convention at the Hotel Astor in New York this week. Approximately 200 from 37 exchanges were present. James R. Grainger, general sales manager, presided at the sessions, the first since Universal was taken over by the Standard Capital group, headed by J. Cheever Cowdin, and interests represented by Charles R. Rogers.

The announcement of 1936-37 product was made to the delegates on the second day of the gathering when they were told that the company will release during the new season some 42 features, 65 single reel productions, four serials, and 104 issues of the Universal Newsreel. In addition, there will be a "special" on the order of "Camera Thrills," entitled "You Can't Get Away With It."

It was explained that the Oswald Cartoons have been increased in number from 13 to 26. There will be also 13 Mentone musicals, this season compressed into single reels instead of two. There will be 13 "Going Places" with Lowell Thomas and 13 "Stranger Than Fiction" reels.

The four serials are headed by Buck Jones in "The Phantom Rider," and include three cartoon strips, "Ace Drummond," "Jungle Jim" and "Secret Agent X-9."

The list of feature productions is headed by "Madame Curie," which will star Irene Dunne in the life story of the woman who discovered radium, written by her daughter, Eve Curie. Jerome Kern, of "Showboat" note, will contribute another musical, "Melody Lady," while a second musical, "Hippodrome," is also high on the list.

Mr. Grainger opened with the statement that the entire sales force had been called in to hear the company's plans for launching a "new Universal" because that message and the new policies to be adopted "are for the entire sales force, not just for district and branch managers." The convention was the first ever attended by the entire national sales organization.

"For the first time in the history of the company," Mr. Cochrane said, "we are properly financed so that we can give you the kind of pictures you have been hungry for . . . and plenty of them."

Cites Advanced Studio Morale

The Universal president praised the work done by Mr. Rogers in reorganizing and strengthening the studio and production staffs and paid tribute to William Koenig, studio manager.

"Studio morale has increased 100 per cent," Mr. Cochrane said. "Mr. Rogers reorganized the studio exactly as you would have done if you were in his place," he told the sales force.

Mr. Cowdin was credited by Mr. Cochrane with the success of Universal's new financing program and the men were told that Universal's new board of directors, a majority of whom are not industry men, has no intention of doing what other financial men did in other companies. They are going to let motion picture men run this motion picture company and they are going to back us because they have confidence in us. They are not merely taking a 'flier' in the market.

Thirteen Stars Assigned; 37 Players Bring Contract List to All-Time High; Story of Mme. Curie Among Leaders

"I accepted the presidency of the new company," he added, "because of these things and because I know we have a bright future. When the company was sold I did not sell any of my stock. I left everything in the new company—practically everything I have made in 30 years of work. I would not have done that without a mighty good reason."

Mr. Cowdin, introduced by the president, approved Mr. Cochrane's statements concerning the board's policy of non-interference with the management and the company's financing arrangements. He related that the purchase of Universal by his Standard Capital came about through his association with men who knew the film business and whose policy was to "find men and give them the power and money to run the company."

He said that he believed successful operation of a motion picture company depended upon the top executive and his staff, the sales manager and his organization, the production organization and a financial policy.

On Wednesday, Mr. Rogers said, "When I came on the Universal lot I found only two real producers, Edward Grainger and Eph Asher, few personalities and extra low morale. The only thing to do was to reorganize. Everyone on the lot has been given a chance to prove himself. It is necessary to run a studio with the head and not the heart."

Thirteen "Universal stars" have been as-

Grand National Well Underway For New Season

After a series of conferences in Hollywood with various independent producers, Edward L. Alperson, president of Pathe's new Grand National Distributing Corporation, will return this week to the home office in New York with word that at least 30, and possibly 52 feature productions will comprise the company's first program, for release in 1936-37. There will be several westerns, and all details will be forthcoming at a series of regional sales conventions to be held in the field starting next month. Carl Leserman, general sales manager, will conduct the meetings, and it is likely that Mr. Alperson will participate.

Mr. Alperson's coast product conferences sent Robert McKinney, a Pathe vice-president, and Robert Goldstein, a New York agent, to Hollywood with the Grand National chief.

George Hirliman will produce a series, in Hirlicolor, for the new company, and at least one feature will star Major G. W. (Original Pawnee Bill) Lillie.

Meanwhile Grand National continued to forge new links in its national distribution chain, buying the exchanges of Distinctive Screen Attractions, in Denver and Salt Lake, following the acquisition of Far West Exchanges along the Pacific coast. Lon Fidler, former owner and operator of Distinctive, will remain with Grand National, probably in charge in Denver and Utah. Mel Hulling, former partner in the operation of the Far West exchanges, will likewise remain with Grand National as coast representative, in charge of all branches in the west.

James Winn, former midwest district manager for Warner Brothers, this week joined Grand National in a similar capacity, with headquarters in Chicago.

The proposed issue of securities of Grand National Films, Inc., was disclosed in a statement of registration filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission at Washington this week. The statement covered 800,000 shares of capital stock, of which 200,000 are outstanding. Of the remainder, according to the formal statement, 200,000 are to be offered to present stockholders at $1.75 per share in the ratio of two shares for each one share held on a date to be determined later; 40,000 shares are under option to Time, Inc., at $2.50 a share, and 160,000 shares are reserved for issuance to Mr. Alperson as president, under an employment contract.

Grand National, according to the statement, was incorporated on March 30, this year, with the Pathe Film Corporation taking 193,000 shares of the capital stock and Mr. Alperson and associates 7,000 shares at $4 per share. Later, however, Pathe sold 59,667 shares to the Alperson group and declared a dividend on its common stock payable on the basis of one share of the latter for each five shares of Pathe held, which will require about 117,019 shares of Grand National.

Any part of the 400,000 shares of common not taken up by stockholders under an option plan will be offered publicly by the underwriters, the Securities and Exchange Commission was told. The 400,000 are to be offered first at $1.75 a share to common shareholders on the basis of two for one.

Isidore Ostrer on Visit

Isidore Ostrer, president of GB, and Mrs. Ostrer, are aboard the Queen Mary, which docks in New York early next week.

Defendants Seek to Quash Copyright Action

A motion to quash the summons for Edwin M. Booth, resident manager in Cincinnati, has been entered in the United States district court there by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, defendant in an infringement suit brought by Margaretta Tuttle, Cincinnati authoress. The company asserts that Mr. Booth is not its agent and that the corporation not doing business in Ohio is not subject to the jurisdiction of the court. RKO-Midwest, co-defendant, has entered a motion for an order of court requiring the plaintiff to comply with certain court rules by attaching a copy of her novel, "Kingdoms of the World," the copyright of which she alleges is infringed in the sound picture, "The Unguarded Hour."

Gain Concession in Canada Tax Change

Film distributors of Canada gained an important point in budget changes laid before the Canadian House of Commons by Charles Dunning, Minister of Finance, when a reduction was granted in the new tax on remittances to foreign companies for film rentals.

The original budget called for a straight five per cent levy on such payments but an amendment adopted in committee stipulates that the tax will be imposed on only 40 per cent of the gross amount paid "by Canadian debtors to non-residents in respect of films whether copyrighted or not." This change brings the tax down to a matter of two per cent on the whole payment instead of five per cent of the gross.

Pennsylvania Sales Tax $2,662,794 in Ten Months

Admission tax receipts from theatres and other amusement places in the state of Pennsylvania, which went into effect in July, 1935, are exceeding expectations, the total for the fiscal year to May 31 reveal. Total collections for the 10-month period were $2,662,794, which compares with the estimate of $3,000,000 for the full year. May collections were $301,634.50, or at the rate of $3,619,614 annually.

Lincoln Suit Is Dismissed

The Independent Theatre Circuit's antitrust suit against Lincoln theatres and major distributors was dismissed without prejudice in Federal court in Nebraska Tuesday, at the direction of the plaintiffs. The complaint charged conspiracy in restraint of trade. Court costs will be carried by the plaintiffs.

The case on which a hearing had twice been postponed due to a crowded docket, was brought by Carl Bard and G. L. Hooper against J. H. Cooper, Lincoln Theatres Corporation, Robert Livingston, manager of the Capitol and major distributors. Paul Good and Loren Laughlin, attorneys, represented the plaintiffs.

Christie Bankruptcy Action Ends Soon

The bankruptcy of the Christie Film Company will be wound up in the United States district court in Los Angeles on June 23 when creditors will meet to hear a petition for a final dividend and to sell or abandon worthless shares of stock. The trustee's final report also will be made.

The trustee's report shows receipts of $9,505.14, disbursements of $3,603.47, and balance on hand, $5,811.67. Total claims proved and allowed are $227,096.19.

Seattle Golf July 9

Exhibitors and exchange men in the Seattle, Wash., territory will gather at the Glendale Country Club on July 9 for the first annual Northwest Film Club golf tournament. A dinner will follow the matches. Handling the details are B. F. Shearer, Neal Walton, Frank L. Newman, Guy F. Navarre and Paul R. Aust.

Dinty Moore Gets Strands

Dinty Moore has been named to replace Harry Charnas as managing director of the New York and Brooklyn Strand theatres by Joseph Bernhard, general manager of the Warner Circuit. Moore has been running the Orpheum and Shubert-Rialto in St. Louis for the company. Charnas has joined B. S. Moss in the operation of the New Criterion which opens on Broadway next month.

Arthur Himmelein Resigns

Arthur Himmelein has resigned as general manager of the Altoona, Pa., theatres operated by the Notopoulos-Altoona Theatres. No successor has been named as yet. Mr. Himmelein had held the post for the past four years.

Burkan Estate Is $1,500,000

Nathan Burkan left an estate of approximately $1,500,000 to his widow and five-year-old son, it was revealed this week when the will of the late theatrical and motion picture lawyer was filed in New York's surrogate's court and offered for probate by Mrs. Marianne Alexander Burkan, to whom he was married seven years ago.

The will was offered by Charles Schwartz and Louis D. Frohlich, attorneys, who were associated with Mr. Burkan for over 20 years. They have formed a law firm, it was disclosed to carry on the general practice of law established by Mr. Burkan. This was his desire, for in the will they were left jointly his extensive law library and the furnishings of his elaborate office at 1450 Broadway. In addition, he named Mr. Schwartz as co-executor of his estate and joint trustees of two trust funds along with Mrs. Burkan.

Mr. Burkan decreed that his estate be divided into two equal parts and each be established as a trust. The beneficiaries are his widow and son, Nathan, Jr. Upon the death of his widow, Mr. Burkan directed that her trust fund be paid to his son. The latter is to receive his own fund in four equal installments beginning on his 21st birthday. The last is to go to him when he is 40.

The lawyer's wife and son are to continue in possession of the estate at King's Point, Great Neck, Long Island.

To Honor Matt Saunders

Manager Mat Saunders of the Palace theatre in Bridgeport, Conn., who is now celebrating his 25th year in the industry, will be honored at a testimonial dinner on June 27 at the Stratfield Hotel.

Paramount Branch Changes

Several personnel changes at the Oklahoma City Paramount exchange include: the resignation of Winston Loew, salesman; promotion of Howard Nicholson, assistant booker, to salesman in western Oklahoma; Jack Curry, transferred from western to eastern Oklahoma; Athel Boyther, from assistant advertising manager to assistant booker; Phillip Ascher, added in Boyther's place; Fred Hill, replacing Sam Craiker, resigned, as assistant shipper.

Court Fixes Fox Claim

Federal Judge Martin T. Manto has allowed a claim by the Colwood Company of Detroit against Fox Theatres Corporation at $2,532,779 for rent on the Fox Theatre Building, Detroit. The claim, based on liability under a lease breached by Fox Theatres in 1933, has been filed for $8,010,465. The court denied a counter claim for $2,900,000 brought against Colwood by Fox Theatres.

Shea and Warner Pool

Feiber and Shea and Warner have pooled their three theatres at Jamestown, N. Y. E. C. Grainger of the former circuit will set the policy of the houses this week, but the Shea theatres will play the choice of the "A" product on a single bill policy.

RKO ANNOUNCES 54 FEATURES, 192 SHORTS FOR '36-37 AT CONVENTION

SELLING STAFF OF RKO RADIO AT ANNUAL CONVENTION GETS READY TO HANDLE NEW PRODUCT

Foreign Contracts Increased 67½ Per Cent in Number Over Last Season, Depinet Tells 350 of Sales Force

Announcement of 54 features and 192 short subjects for 1936-37 release by Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Radio Pictures, and addresses by Leo Spitz, president of RKO; M. H. Aylesworth, Sam Briskin, Pandro Berman, Sol Lesser and David L. Loew were highlights of the opening sessions of RKO's annual sales convention this week at the Waldorf-Astoria hotel in New York.

More than 350 delegates answered the roll call by A. A. Schubart, general committeeman, as the convention opened Monday. Those on the dais were Mr. Spitz, Mr. Depinet, Jules Levy, Mr. Aylesworth, Major Leslie E. Thompson, A. H. McCausland, Nate Blumberg, Courtland Smith, Mr. Berman, Phil Reisman, Mr. Briskin, William Mallard, Harry Michalson, S. Barret McCormick, Howard S. Benedict, E. L. McEvoy, Cresson E. Smith, Leo M. Devaney, Nat Levy and Roy Disney.

Following his opening address, Mr. Depinet congratulated the foreign department in increasing its number of contracts 67½ per cent over last season. He spoke of increased distributing facilities in the foreign field.

Fifty-four features, 192 short subjects including 36 two-reel comedies, 32 one-reelers produced by the Van Beuren Corporation, 13 releases of the March of Time, seven issues of Pathe Topics and 104 issues of Pathe News comprise the releases of the next season. Walt Disney's Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphony cartoons will come under the RKO banner shortly.

Mr. Depinet announced that Hal Horne is joining RKO as a producer.

Mr. Briskin, vice-president in charge of production in Hollywood, said the budget would be the highest ever. Thirty new season films are in preparation.

Kay Kamen said the Micky Mouse merchandising enterprises include 100 licensees in America and 50 abroad handling tieups, all in all a $35,000,000 annual gross business.

Mr. H. Aylesworth, RKO board chairman, assured the convention that "there will be no merger."

Mr. Spitz said the reorganization will be completed early in the new year.

Other convention speakers included Roy Disney, Ralph Rolan, Lowell Calvert, Courtland Smith, Amedee J. Van Beuren, Hal Horne, S. Barret McCormick, Jules Levy, Herbert J. Yates, Major Edward Bowes, E. L. McEvoy, and Harry Michalson.

Fred Astaire will be starred both alone and with Ginger Rogers; Katharine Hepburn will be presented in two pictures; Ginger Rogers also will be starred alone, as will Lily Pons, Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Donat. Joan Bennet and Fred Stone will be co-starred in "By the Dawn's Early Light." John Boles and Charles Boyer will each be presented in one or more films. Joe E. Brown will be seen in a group scheduled for production under the aegis of David L. Loew and Lew Brown is preparing a musical to co-feature Joe Penner, Helen Broderick, Victor Moore, Karkyakarkus, Harriet Hilliard and Baby Patsy Lee Parsons. Claudette Colbert is a new addition.

George O'Brien will be offered in a series of six outdoor westerns, which George Hirliman will produce.

The short subject releases include, besides the 13 issues of the March of Time, 36 two-reel comedies produced by Lee Marcus featuring Edgar Kennedy, Leon Errol and others; 32 Van Beuren single-reel films, including 13 Bill Corum Sports Reviews, 13 "The World on Parade" and six issues of "The Struggle to Live" series. There will also be seven issues of Pathe Topics, magazine novelty reels.

Feature production will be centralized at the RKO Radio Studios in Hollywood, as will the two-reel comedy program. The George Hirliman, Sol Lesser and David L. Loew units will probably be produced at independent studios. Van Beuren production as heretofore will be handled in the East with Don Hancock in charge of production.

Program Will Be Built Around Nucleus of 60 Players; Ten Associate Producers Will Work with Briskin

Radio Pictures will build its new program around a nucleus of some 60 players. Stars:

Fred Astaire
Harriet Hilliard

AUSTRALIAN SHOWMEN INVITE INTERVENTION

Government Hesitant; Exhibitor Organization Gives Its Views in Resolutions; Parley Fails

by CLIFF HOLT
in Sydney

Despite the failure of two costly politically conducted film inquiries in the past eight years, members of the N. S. W. Exhibitors' Association are again inviting the Government's intervention over matters that could well be decided within the industry. Even the Government on this occasion seems indisposed to have anything to do with the squabbles of exhibitors and distributors. It was on Cabinet's suggestion that the two parties went before an impartial intermediary to seek unanimity; but the conferences had a negative result, and the fight goes on.

The major issues over which the exhibitors and distributors are at loggerheads are theatre building restrictions and rejection rights. But the exhibitors' camp is determined to take the fight further afield, as the resolutions which follow show so very clearly:

1. To inform the N. S. W. Government of its change of policy towards the Quota Act so far as that section which deals with the distributors' quota is concerned.

2. To approach the Commonwealth Government with a plea for the application of an ad valorem duty instead of a footage duty.

3. To call upon distributors to waive the 1/— minimum admission clause and permit exhibitors to charge a minimum of 6d.

4. To obtain legal advice as to what action could be taken against members who refuse to abide by the association's decisions.

A brief discussion of these resolutions gives an idea of the bitterness of the battle. Take No. 1 for instance. The N. S. W. Quota Act sets out that if there are enough Australian films available for distributors to fulfill their quota obligations they must "acquire" a sufficient number to enable them to do so. Whether it was intended that the Act should impose upon distributors the obligation of actually producing their own films to make up the deficit was never made quite clear; but now the exhibitors have decided to ask the Government to make it compulsory for distributors to produce on the argument that if there are not enough locally made films to go round, the exhibitors, to meet their own quota obligations, will have to show second-run quota subjects.

Ask Ad Valorem Duty

The exhibitors take another slap at distributors in Resolution 2, by not only asking the Commonwealth Government to introduce an ad valorem duty, but by also recommending a contingent quota. This, of course, would embarrass all distributors, insomuch as for the number of pictures released by them in Australia, they would have to release a proportionate number of Australian films in their own market.

In Resolution 3, the attack is obviously directed at the competition of theatres erected at the instance of exchanges. It is argued by the association that a sixpenny admission would effectively halt the spread of "sponsored opposition" because new houses would find it difficult to withstand the competition of established houses on such a low admission. They contend, moreover, that a 6d admission would not encourage investors who may be approached to finance new theatre ventures.

Exhibitors Oppose Exchanges

Executives of the Exhibitors' Association say that the 6d admission will only be enforced against such theatres as are known to have been erected through the influence of distributors; independent ventures will not be fought with such methods.

The association will name the date and method of application of the policy, and even if the M.P.D.A. refuses to waive the 1/— minimum (and it's practically certain they will refuse) the association will go ahead with their scheme regardless.

Morton Arrives in New York To Sell Two British Films

M. C. Morton, sales director of Twickenham Film Distributors, Ltd., London, arrived in New York this week, on the S.S. Normandie. His visit here is for the purpose of consummating negotiations for the American distribution of "Broken Blossoms" and "She Shall Have Music." Mr. Morton is stopping at the Waldorf Astoria and expects to be in New York about two weeks.

Golf Tournament Nears

Final arrangements are being made for The Film Daily's annual golf tournament, at the Glen Oaks Club in Great Neck, Long Island. A wide assortment of prizes is being offered. The tournament was originally scheduled for early this month but was postponed until June 24 to allow executives to attend their various sales conventions.

Reserve "Ziegfeld" Ruling

Judge Lester Patterson in the New York supreme court, Westchester County, has reserved decision in the suit filed by the estate of Florenz Ziegfeld against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to enjoin the distributor from using the name in connection with "The Great Ziegfeld," from further exhibition of the picture and for accounting of all profits.

Fight Cloth Signs in New Orleans

A move to enforce city ordinances against the erection of cloth signs across streets and sidewalks of the New Orleans business area has been started by City Architect Morris B. DePass, who issued notices to theatres to remove such signs. Mr. DePass said they will be given ten days to comply with the law and that unless the signs are removed affidavits will be filed. No signs are permitted to extend across streets and all signs must be placed at least nine feet above sidewalks, Mr. DePass said.

Seattle Refuses License

The Rialto, third run film and stage house in downtown Seattle, has been refused a renewal of its annual license by the license committee of the City Council. Granting of the new license was denied after protests by Parent-Teacher groups and ministerial bodies who objected to alleged obscene language and nudity of stage performances.

Columbia Meets In Chicago On Monday, Tuesday

Columbia Pictures is expected to announce 58 features on next season's program, in addition to 104 to 116 short subjects at the company's annual sales convention at the Drake Hotel in Chicago next Monday and Tuesday. Of the feature lineup, 16 will be westerns, eight to be known as "The Fighting Rangers" and the other eight to star Charles Starrett in a series of Peter B. Kyne stories.

More than 250 delegates are expected at the gathering, including east and west coast executives, divisional and branch managers, the entire sales force, office managers and home office executives including A. Schneider, J. McConville, Nate Spingold, R. Jackter, Hy Daab, L. Weinberg, L. Astor, M. Weisfeldt, L. Barbano, M. Wormser, A. Seligman, M. Grad, L. Jaffe, M. Hannock, H. C. Kaufman, B. E. Zeeman, V. Borrelli, B. Brennan, F. McGrann, C. Roberts, S. Liggett, L. Picker and G. Joseph. A special train will leave New York Saturday afternoon bearing the Manhattan contingent.

Abe Montague, general sales manager, will preside, and although the meeting is officially scheduled for only Monday and Tuesday, home office executives will remain in the Windy City throughout the week for further discussions of forthcoming product.

Court Confirms Hess Libel Award

Unanimous confirmation of an award of $10,365 in favor of Gabriel L. Hess, general attorney of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, against the Churchman Company and Dr. Guy Emery Shiplar, editor of the publication, The Churchman, was given late last week by the appellate division of the New York supreme court in dismissing the publication's appeal.

Mr. Hess had charged that the magazine is not the official publication of any branch of the church, and that on November 14th, 1931, it had libeled him by asserting that he had been indicted in Ontario, Canada, for conspiracy to prevent competition in motion picture exhibition.

The magazine admitted that the article was false and printed a retraction, asserting the facts had been taken from a source 'usually reliable." Mr. Hess sought $150,000. A jury before Supreme Court Justice Lydon returned the verdict which was upheld by the appellate division.

Refuses "Zombie" Receiver

Justice Louis A. Valente in New York supreme court has denied a motion made on behalf of the Amusement Securities Corporation for the appointment of a receiver in connection with injunction proceedings against the Academy Pictures Distributing Corporation. The action arises over "The Revolt of the Zombies."

Governor Cites Honor in Presenting Quigley Bronze Plaque to Hardwick

THE distinction which goes with the winning of a Quigley Award for outstanding showmanship was emphasized by Governor Tingley of New Mexico when he made a special trip of 120 miles to Clovis last week to make the presentation of the Bronze Plaque for April to Russell Hardwick of the Lyceum theatre at Clovis.

"I am particularly impressed by the resourcefulness and enterprising spirit of your citizenry, especially so because of their enthusiasm and energy to put things over," Governor Tingley told the people of Clovis in making the presentation.

"The enjoyment of this visit is enriched because I have the honor and privilege to make an award to one of your associates and fellow-citizens for meritorious service in the promotion of a higher standard of theatre publicity.

"This award, known as the Quigley Award, is a bronze plaque and is given by the Managers' Round Table Club, an organization sponsored by the MOTION PICTURE HERALD, an international publication of the motion picture industry, for a different and unusual publicity campaign on the motion picture "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine."

"The competition for the Quigley Award is international in scope and is actively participated in by theatre managers, in cities large and small throughout the world. It is highly coveted and it is a distinct honor to be the recipient of the Quigley Award. I believe this is the first time this award has been made to a person in the Rocky Mountain region.

"I am proud to present to Mr. Russell Hardwick, the manager of the Lyceum theatre, in Clovis, New Mexico, the Quigley Award of the Managers' Round Table of THE MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

"Mr. Hardwick is to be congratulated and highly commended for his splendid efforts, his zeal and his originality, all of which are typical of the enterprising spirit of Clovis and Curry County."

A dream materialized is the way Mr. Hardwick described the honor, in thanking Governor Tingley.

"Since the inception of the Quigley Awards I have dreamed of being honored by receiving one of them. To get one is similar to making a success of a business, fraternal or civic, or social organization, or like making a success in your high and responsible office.

"You must have cooperation. It isn't hard to make plans. To have them executed and carried to a successful conclusion is the important thing and requires the effort and cooperation of friends and associates, and I am indebted to my staff of employees for their untiring effort which has made this occasion possible.

"I consider this a distinct honor, and am doubly honored in having received the Quigley Award from so distinguished a person as yourself. I shall treasure this always as one of my most valuable possessions and to me this shall always be a memorable event."

POSITION OF HOLLYWOOD FILMS IN GERMANY HELD MORE DIFFICULT

Future of American Companies Is Described as Uncertain Due to Tightened Restrictions; Imports Fall Off Sharply

Tightening of the already severe restrictions of various sorts is making the position of the American industry in Germany increasingly difficult and its future extremely uncertain, according to word received this week from Berlin, which is substantiated by the foreign departments of American motion picture companies.

The industry in Germany is controlled by the Film Chamber (Reichsfilmkammer), which is under the close surveillance of the governmental Ministry of Propaganda. In addition to numerous regulations aimed at foreign films, the German Government is subsidizing its domestic producers attempting to stimulate exports abroad, including the United States.

As a result of subsidies given various German industries, the State Department of the United States has announced that counter duties will be imposed on subsidized German products imported into the United States. German film imports into this country are not large enough to cause any worry to American film companies, but countervailing duties have been placed in effect against German-made cameras.

An increasing number of American films has been banned recently in Germany, on political or moral grounds, with the obvious intention of stifling foreign imports to the advantage of domestic producers. American companies select for export to Germany only those films felt unlikely to run into censorship objections, but even this has not proved effective because the Propaganda Ministry's attitude is unpredictable.

Seven Refusals to One Company

The gravity of the situation was described over the weekend in the following copyrighted Berlin dispatch by Ralph W. Barnes in the New York Herald Tribune:

"The position of German distributing branches of American film companies has become precarious in recent weeks, in large part as a result of the increasingly severe censorship by the Propaganda Ministry.

"Although the season is near in which Americans present programs to the German theatre management for the twelve months beginning in September, these companies have little to offer, since the majority of the films they have submitted to the Propaganda Ministry in the last month or so have been turned down, on one pretext or another, as unshowable in Germany.

"One of the three principal companies involved—Twentieth Century-Fox, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Paramount—has had seven refusals in the last few days. The situation has attracted sufficient attention even in German quarters to provide the subject for an extensive article in the Nationalzeitung, of Essen, mouthpiece of Colonel General Hermann Wilhelm Goering, Air Minister and Prussian Premier.

"This paper points to the popularity of American pictures with German audiences and takes sides, up to a certain point, with the American companies and in a veiled manner reproaches the Propaganda Ministry, which is headed by Dr. Paul Joseph Goebbels, for undue severity.

TWO FILMS BARRED BY NAZI REGIME

The lengths to which the Nazi Government goes in establishing criteria for films is demonstrated in the fact that in the last few days it has banned "The Prisoner of Shark Island" on the ground that it is "too cruel," and "A Message to Garcia" because of the manner in which a German character was treated in the film. Both are Twentieth Century-Fox pictures.

"The Country Doctor," produced by the same company, was banned on the ground that Jean Hersholt is of Jewish extraction. He was born in Copenhagen, Denmark, and is known as a Dane.

The Twentieth Century-Fox home office in New York asked the Hollywood studio to determine whether Hersholt is Jewish. Word was received back at the home office that one of the star's grandmothers was a Jewess. This information was cabled to Germany and it is thought the film still will be banned.

"Though the paper does not say so, the Jewish issue bulks large in the censorship. Films are now commonly barred on the ground that Jews were involved either as producers, directors or actors, or even on the ground that the music employed was composed by Jews. This week a permit was refused to an American film because one of the actors had recently married a 'non-Aryan.' Another picture was barred on the ground that a Jew, who is now dead, was involved indirectly.

"Apart from the censorship, American companies may obtain permission in principle to show films in the Reich only by a complicated procedure. There are now available about thirty permits for foreign films. They are divided among German film companies in proportion to the export business which these companies have been able to do. The German companies, in turn, sell the permits to American companies for 10,000 marks each. Thus, the permit system is an indirect subsidy of the exportation of German films.

Racial and Financial Problems

"Having purchased the permit, the American company must pass the censorship before negotiating with theatre managements for a showing. American firms are threatened with losing what they paid for permits, without being in a position to provide corresponding films to the liking of the Propaganda Ministry. Moreover, there are reports in the film trade that for the forthcoming season the number of purchaseable permits may be reduced to less than half the present number.

"In addition to their other worries, the German distributing branch of one of the American companies has been involved in serious difficulties recently because it still employs Jews on its staff.

Increasing Number of American Films Banned in Germany, Which Subsidizes Industry; U. S. Levies Counter Duties

"As the Nationalzeitung points out, the American film firms make money for German theatres whose managements now fear that the policy being followed by the Propaganda Ministry will cut into their profits.

"The Nationalzeitung emphasizes the financial difficulties which American film companies operating here experience as a result of the existing currency control. It is true that currency regulations prevent these companies from transferring their funds abroad and thus from collecting in America any profit they might make. Yet, since their overhead in Germany is small, they would be satisfied to carry on without complaint were it not for the throttling censorship and other restrictions. Money made here could be used to pay for their newsreel pictures taken in Germany for American use, for instance."

104 German Films, 40 American

The forthcoming INTERNATIONAL MOTION PICTURE ALMANAC, published by Quigley Publications, will give the following pertinent facts:

On the basis of official German censor figures, 185 features were shown during the 1934-35 playing season, of which 104 were German, 40 American, and 41 "other foreign" films. During the previous season, the total was 221, including 117 German, 68 American, and 36 "other foreign" films. Thus, during 1934-35, foreign films accounted for 43.8 per cent of the total market supply as against 47.5 per cent during the previous season.

Of 55 films banned in Germany in 1935, sixteen were features, and of these six were American, five German, and five came from other countries.

Germany, which exports many films to Hungary, does not admit Hungarian pictures because they do not fulfil the requirements of the Aryan Paragraph governing the employment of Jews. Hungarian producers have urged their Government to apply energetic sanctions in retaliation.

Because Germany is the best market for Austrian films, the Austrian producers are compelled to satisfy the German requirements concerning the strict application of the Aryan Paragraph, and they exclude all Jews from production.

BRITISH CONFERENCE BRINGS NEW CONTRACT PROBLEMS TO THE FORE

Exhibitors Association Meets at Eastbourne for Annual Airing of Grievances and Further Advancing of Trade Theories

Complaints of Intimidation by the Distributors and Threats of Opposition Building of Theatres Promise New Fight

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

The big social and business event of the British trade year, the Summer Conference of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, opens at Eastbourne on Monday, June 22d, and will continue until Friday, June 26th. Each succeeding year the Conference has drawn bigger attendances of exhibitors, distributors, their wives, relations and friends and, with the event placed on this occasion at a popular seaside resort, a total attendance record of round the thousand may be set up.

Although pleasure trips, garden parties, receptions and big film premieres under holiday conditions play a big part in the proceedings, the Conference undoubtedly has a very serious side. In a sense it is an industry parliament.

Both in the official proceedings and in the many occasions which arise for informal discussion there is opportunity for the discussion of grievances and for the airing of trade theory which arises at no other time, for never are so many exhibitors gathered together, or given the same opportunity of exchanging views with other trade sections.

On several previous occasions the Conference, in the face of an apparently innocuous agenda, has "stampeded" and, through the General Council meeting of the CEA, which is always a feature of the proceedings, passed resolutions which have had a very definite effect on trade developments. It was a Summer Conference at Glasgow which forced the withdrawal of "Phantom of the Opera" after a notorious publicity indiscretion. "No Guarantees or Disc Charges" and "A Forty Per Cent Maximum" are other slogans originating at these functions which have definitely helped to shape exhibitor policy, even if they have not carried it to complete success. The limitation of program time and the formulation of a definite exhibitor attitude on overbuilding are other matters first ventilated at the Conferences.

Contractual Problems

This year the meeting takes place with a number of serious matters at issue between exhibitors and distributors and it will be according to precedent if, at the General Council meeting on Tuesday, something forcible is said, and possibly resolutions are passed, in regard to the general contractual relations of CEA members with distributors in the Kinematograph Renters Society. That these are in many ways seriously unsatisfactory is to be deduced from the fact that the Standard Contract, drafted by a CEA-KRS joint committee, was amended in many details by the CEA Council and now is right up in the air, consequential on the rejection of the CEA amendments by the Council of the Renters Society.

CUBAN CENSORSHIP PROBLEM IN AMERICA

Foreign departments of American film distributors in New York this week were speculating whether double censorship is in store for film exports to Cuba, in view of the Cuban Government's decision to establish a film censor board in New York, with Roberto Hernandez as commissioner.

Effective July 1, American pictures destined for Cuba are to be examined and censored prior to shipment. The question is whether in view of this the censorship in Cuba will be eliminated.

Cuban censorship is both political and moral, but it is a minor worry because that country represents a small market.

The most obvious feature about the draft of the Standard Contract as evolved by the joint committee, was that it formally recognized most of the practices which distributors had been enforcing, in many cases against exhibitor protests. The right to impose limited credit terms as a contract condition, and the right of unlimited entry to theatres with free access to the box-office, were typical concessions and there were no obvious concessions to exhibitors to set against them. Now, during the last few weeks, complaints of intimidation of exhibitors by distributors, and suggestions that the threat of opposition building has been used have been raised in CEA branch meetings and undoubtedly will be before the Council—probably at Eastbourne. Always in the background is the CEA's desire to make maximum prices an official policy.

Overbuilding Issue

Most provocative of the formal papers to be read to the Conference will probably be that set down for Thursday morning, "Redundancy—or Progress?" with the speaker Ken Nyman, B.Sc., a young London exhibitor, once a schoolmaster, who is chairman of the London Branch of the CEA and a very witty and very formidable contributor to trade discussions. Mr. Nyman's title hints a critical stand regarding the official exhibitor attitude on new theatre erection, which is more or less that any new theatre is an invasion of the field of an existing theatre whether it be obsolete or not.

The other papers are: on Wednesday, "Film Censorship Today," by Lord Tyrrell of Avon, the new president of the British Board of Film Censors; "It Pays To Advertise," by Simon Rowson, who previously has contributed a series of papers of great statistical importance at these and other trade occasions, and "Scientific Buying and Selling," by J. F. X. Prendergast, another exhibitor who has been prominent in some recent controversies.

A Trade Exhibition, at the Winter Gardens, is a feature of the Conference once again. Starting in a very modest way the Exhibition has been an outstanding success at recent Conferences. Practically every company handling equipment and theatre furnishing is represented and the sound wiring companies are in force. Getting a big percentage of their potential customers under one roof, these companies all do exceptionally good business.

Woman Mayor a Hostess

Socially, the Conference offers an almost unbroken sequence of functions and pleasure trips to those bent on holiday-making. A civic reception on Monday by the woman mayor of Eastbourne, Miss E. M. Thornton, is followed on Tuesday by a garden party at Devonshire Park, with exhibition stallholders as the hosts, and by the conference banquet in the evening, with a midnight cabaret to follow. On Wednesday, there is a luncheon jointly organized by the London, Southern Midlands and Sussex branches of the CEA, and in the evening a premiere of "Seven Sinners," followed by a reception and dance by Gaumont-British. On Thursday a motor trip including a visit to Arundel Castle is a morning fixture, followed by tea with the Mayor of Worthing. In the evening comes a premiere of "The Three Maxims," and another reception and dance, at the invitation of General Film Distributors. Friday concludes the affairs with an overseas trip to Boulogne and Le Touquet and a film star ball in the evening, but by that time the attendance will have been reduced to pure pleasure seekers.

CEA's Trip to America

For the visit of British exhibitors to New York and Hollywood, organized by Arthur Taylor, secretary of the London & Home Counties branch of the C.E.A., thirty bookings already have been made. The party, which will probably be further increased, sails on the Queen Mary on July 22.

Distributors State Quota Case

The Statutory Committee on the Films Act, under Lord Moyne's chairmanship, was to receive the case of the Kinematograph Renters' Society, speaking for distributors, over the weekend. Its main feature was to be a recommendation that the footage basis of the British film quota be modified by a system under which distributors would be obligated to spend a fixed amount, governed by its American output, on British films but would be free to concentrate on a smaller number of better films, with an "average" price operating in place of the individual minimum cost of $50,000 favored by British production interests.

LEADERS AGREE ON WHAT SHOULD BE DONE TO EFFECT SELF-REGULATION

Second Phase Completed, Trade Practice Conferees Will Determine How and When Regulation Can Be Effected

BULLETIN

Major distributors secretly have agreed to the type of machinery for the local conciliation boards, which in addition to their trade practice functions will serve as a national field organization similar to if not actually supplanting, the Film Boards of Trade, the cost to be prorated among the distributors.

The large distributing corporations and exhibitors of the country, as represented by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, finally agreed this week on the nature of corrections needed to establish self-regulation in distribution-exhibition and in effecting harmonious relations, especially contractually, between the buyers and sellers of motion picture product. The next step is to determine how the changes should be made, and when, and this determination will come immediately after Independence Day.

The movement, sponsored by the MPTOA, was organized into three distinct phases: (1) Presentation by the exhibitors to the distributors of proposals deemed necessary to alleviate troubled conditions; (2) obtaining an agreement on what should be done; and (3), determining how and when the end might be accomplished.

This week the second phase of the procedure was completed when GB Pictures, Twentieth Century-Fox and United Artists, last to meet, independently with the exhibitors, agreed in principle with the exhibitors' demands for an unconditional cancellation and local conciliation boards to adjust trade disputes. The committee had previously met with all of the other large distributors, except Warner, which refuses to participate "on the advice of counsel."

Both Twentieth Century-Fox and United Artists advised the MPTOA trade practice committee in individual meetings that they favored the establishment of local conciliation boards to hear and aid in the settlement of local trade problems, but both companies are undecided on score charge policy.

Twentieth Century-Fox, through John D. Clark, general sales manager, advised the exhibitor delegation that it would agree to an unrestricted 10 per cent cancellation privilege, but that it could not commit itself at this time on a definite policy concerning the collection of score charges next season. Designated play dates and the buying of short subjects were described during the meetings as bargaining issues to be determined with the negotiation of contracts.

United Artists holds that its product is not subject to cancellation inasmuch as its pictures are sold singly, George J. Schaefer, vice-president, and Paul Lazarus, sales manager, told the exhibitors. United Artists is now working out its score charge policy for next season and its decision is to be forwarded to Ed Kuykendall, MPTOA president, in the near future, Mr. Schaefer advised the exhibitor delegation.

TRADE PRACTICE UNIT LAUDS TRADE PRESS

The trade practice committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America told Motion Picture Herald on Wednesday:

"The progress made in developing self-regulation in the motion picture industry, and in creating harmonious relations between distributors and exhibitors through the series of trade practice conferences now being conducted between the large corporations and the MPTOA, would not have been possible without the splendid cooperation that was given by the motion picture trade press in presenting so consistently both sides as the various steps are being taken. The attention directed by the trade press on the meetings and the developments emanating therefrom play an important part in the outcome."

Mr. Kuykendall said that the committee had received no reply from Warner Bros. to an invitation for a meeting with that company. The committee has held meetings with all other national distributors. He said he was hopeful that the distributors would get together and work out their final trade practice programs and methods of putting them into effect during the next few weeks. He said he would reconvene his committee in New York early in July.

GB agreed to cooperate fully with the MPTOA committee in effecting the exhibitor organization's 10-point trade practice program for next season. The company indicated that it would make concessions on cancellations, score charges and other trade practice issues which would match those offered by other companies, Mr. Kuykendall said.

The MPTOA head and Lewen Pizor represented the exhibitor trade practice committee, while GB was represented by Arthur Lee and George Weeks.

National Decency Legion Classifies 9 New Films

Eight of nine new pictures reviewed and classified in the list for the current week of the National Legion of Decency were noted as unobjectionable for general patronage. Only one was cited as objectionable in part. The new films reviewed and their classification follow:

Class A-1, "Unobjectionable for General Patronage": "Educating Father," "Fugitive Sheriff," "The Girl of the Ozarks," "Gruess Mir Die Lore," "Hearts Divided," "Nine Days a Queen," "Poor Little Rich Girl," "The Shadow," Class B, "Objectionable in Part": "Secret Agent."

Final Report on Allied Meeting

Exhibitor organizations this week were active on four fronts: (1) Allied's national convention committee met in Cleveland for final reports on the meeting, held in that city two weeks ago; (2) In St. Louis, the MPTO of Eastern Missouri advocated the immediate elimination of double features, cut rate scales and bargain hours; (3) Connecticut's MPTO condemned Paramount's new accessory outright-sales plan; and, (4) The Independent Theatre Owners in New York postponed until fall a plan to merge with the competitive Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce.

Present in Cleveland for the final report were, M. B. Horowitz, general committee chairman for the convention, Martin G. Smith, Toledo, chairman of the convention committee; Ernest Schwartz, reception committee; Robert Menches, convention committee; Henry Greenberger, entertainment committee; John Kalafat, exhibits committee; John Pekras, exhibits committee; P. J. Wood and G. W. Erdmann, executive secretaries.

The elimination of double features, cut rate price scales and bargain hours was voted as a means of checking the swelling boom of new theatre building that is sweeping the St. Louis territory. Leaders of the industry are of the opinion that there is no present need for outsiders entering the motion picture business at this time, and that if new houses are needed in any section the men now operating existing theatres should be given the first chance to provide the new facilities. It was agreed that it will first be necessary to get the local first run houses to eliminate double feature bills and bargain hours before it will be possible for the second runs and subsequent run houses to fall in line.

The Independent MPTO of Connecticut's action in passing a resolution condemning Paramount's new accessories plan, in spite of the credit feature, presupposed that a majority of exhibitors would not be able to take advantage of the credit. It was also decided to ask sound equipment men to address future meetings. The Golf tournament has been set for July 14 on Championship Course No. 1 at the Race Brook Country Club, New Haven.

Although details for the amalgamation in New York of the TOCC and the ITOA have been worked out between Charles L. Reilly, president of the former organization, and Harry Brandt, head of the ITOA, Mr. O'Reilly has not been able to meet with the ITOA men for a final session.

Product and sales policies of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and Twentieth Century-Fox for next season were discussed last week by the ITOA board of directors in New York. Increases of 75 per cent by MGM and 25 per cent by Twentieth Century-Fox were noted by the exhibitors, it was said following the session.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Abilene, Kansas

Dear Herald:

We started to tell you about Mr. and Mrs. George Moore of the Moore theatre at Plainville in our last week's letter but we ran out of space. You ought to meet these folks. The last time we were there we were stuck there for three days on account of mud, yes, mud. It was so doggone muddy that we couldn't get out.

We also met three film boys there: O. E. Ringler, who is now branch manager for the Republic Film Company at Omaha; Johnnie Flynn, a salesman out of K. C., and another gentleman whose name has slipped our mind. George took us up to his house and gave all of us a pleasant dinner, and oh boy, how Mrs. Moore can cook pheasants. Gee Whiz.

When we got to Plainville we also met Johnnie Flynn, the first time we had seen him since we ate pheasants at George's house. And listen, Elmer, if you ever meet Johnnie don't try to talk to him in Swede, for he won't understand you. We never saw a Polander who could understand Swede. Johnnie sells Universal service out of K. C. and he wanted the Herald. We are going to have it sent to him.

But speaking of Mr. and Mrs. Moore, there's a couple of folks that Kansas ought to be proud of, and no doubt they are. We had a very delightful visit with them and have a standing invitation to come back some time. We hope we can do it.

Over at Stockton we had a very pleasant visit with Mr. and Mrs. Pinnell. It was our first meeting with them but we hope it won't be the last. Mr. Pinnell sells United Artists film out of Kansas City.

We went to Hoisington to see our old-time friend, O. K. Mason, but he had gone to Kansas City. His father and mother used to live across the street from us up "where the flowers bloom in the spring" (sometimes)—but we met the manager of the Royal theatre, Mr. Glen Deeter, who impressed us as a very fine gentleman. Mr. Deeter is managing the Royal for the Commonwealth Theatres Company. Glen is also a Herald fan.

Mr. Frank Larned at La Crosse is remodeling his theatre, which would indicate that he is expecting this country to have a wheat crop. We hope it does, for they say they haven't had one for several years. We found Mr. Larned a very agreeable gentleman and he expressed his pleasure in meeting us. It was mutual. We were also glad of the opportunity of meeting him. He says we called on him some years back but we had forgotten it. That might indicate that may be we are getting old. We passed 27 some little time back.

If you should ever go to Kingman, Kansas (and you should go there some time) you should be sure to stop at the Meade theatre and meet Mr. Meade and his son Frank and see the Meade theatre, and you will agree with us that you had never seen so beautiful a theatre in as small a town as the Meade. It is the last word in theatre elegance and a surprise to everyone to find such a playhouse.

Frank wanted us to stop over and go fishing with him, but you know how it is, Elmer, we can't fish and work at the same time, and if we don't work Ernie would want to know why, and if we couldn't fish Frank would think we had been a liar about our fishing. Well, anyhow, be sure to see the Meade theatre. All of Kingman is proud of their playhouse, and it is very appropriate they should be. We are going back there some time or know the reason why.

At Wichita we called at the Novelty theatre and met F. A. Bull, the genial manager. We asked him if he was of the Durham or Holstein variety and he said he wasn't connected with either but was a common everyday Bull who could stick his horns in the ground and beller as loud as any Durham or Holstein in Kansas.

We also met L. E. Royster, a Columbia salesman out of Kansas City who calls on the boys out in this wheat district, and our judgment is that he sells 'em, too. L. E. said he was pleased to meet us but that he was not the same fellow who occupied the cell next to ours. Doesn't it beat all how some people resemble others?

We came over to Abilene for two reasons, one being that it is a mighty good town and another being that we wanted to meet Mr. Stowic of the Plaza theatre, but when we got there we learned that he had gone to Wichita on business. We remember calling on him some years ago and we had a very pleasant visit with him.

Mr. Stowic has two theatres, the Lyric and the Plaza. The Plaza is a comparatively new one and it is another of Kansas' beautiful playhouses. You ought to see it if you are interested in lovely theatres. We were sorry not to meet Mr. Stowic but we had a very pleasant visit with his assistant manager, L. R. Pechin, who looks after the Plaza when Mr. Stowic is away, and our judgment is that he looks after the Plaza just about 100 per cent.

There are two boys out in Idaho who were afraid their subscriptions to the Herald might run out, so they sent us their checks to have it renewed for them, Fred Erickson of the Gem theatre at Filer and S. L. George of the Mountain Home theatre at Mountain Home. Both boys seemed to be sorry that we were forced to turn around and come back on account of the high altitude. We had started to see these boys and are sorry we had to climb up seven thousand feet to get into Idaho, but then Joe Hewitt of Robinson, Illinois, says that's nothing, for we are dizzy all the while.

Then here comes a letter from Albert Knopp, manager of the Texas and Ritz theatres way down in Hebbronville, Texas, and he says he was very much interested in our description of "Hell's Half Acre" and "Squaw Teat Butts" that we reported in our letter from Wyoming. (Who'd think that anyone away down in Texas reads our letters?) Mr. Knopp says he was out there some years ago and say these places and that our description of them called his mind to his trip to the Yellow Stone National Park and other places of interest in the far west. He also wanted to know why we didn't visit him when we were in the Rio Grande valley a couple of winters ago. Why, gee whiz, Albert, we didn't know there was any such a place as Hebbronville.

He mentioned our fishing with Bob Smith of Mission. Yes, we did go fishing with Bob, and Bob is some fisher, too, as well as a theatre manager, and that goes for "Shine" Mason of the theatre at McAllen also.

When we crossed a creek yesterday we saw some little boys and girls wading in it and this called to our mind the story we told you about in a former letter, of the teacher who told her class that each should write a verse of poetry that would rhyme with Nellie, and little Johnnie wrote his and when the teacher called him up to read it, he read, "Once there was a girl named Nellie, and she fell in the creek up to her knees," and the teacher said, "Why, Johnnie, that doesn't rhyme with Nellie" and Johnnie replied, "Well, I know it don't teacher, but the water wasn't deep enough." We've been in deeper than that, lots of times, but we will let it go at that.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

MR. DEEDS GOES TO TOWN: Gary Cooper, Jean Arthur—No one can deny that this is a good show; it is well produced and entertains. The two leading stars carry their parts to perfection. In my opinion it would have been better if it had cut a couple of thousand feet, especially the court room scenes are too long. However, I had many compliments and no kicks from average business. It is not as good a show as "It Happened One Night." in my opinion. Running time, 118 minutes. Played May 31.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Rural and small town patronage.

HEIR TO TROUBLE: Ken Maynard, Joan Perry—Average Maynard picture. Smart director put quick fade-out scene on when Ken started to sing. Running time, 60 minutes. Played May 24-26.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

IF YOU COULD ONLY COOK: Jean Arthur, Herbert Marshall—Wholesome entertainment. Kept audience in good humor all the way through.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Harry Richman—Very poor crowd the second night. Not as good as expected. Played June 6-7.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

MUSIC GOES AROUND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Harry Richman—There is nothing wrong with this picture. Plugging the song in the eighth reel is too prolonged and would have been better to cut part of it out. I had several compliments on the picture but failed at the box office, probably partly caused by the closing of the schools. Running time, 87 minutes. Played May 24.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Rural and small town patronage.

MUSIC GOES 'ROUND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Harry Richman—Not a special but can get by as a good programmer. Don't expect too much of it, however. Played May 27-28.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

First National

BRIDES ARE LIKE THAT: Ross Alexander, Anita Louise—This is a dandy little program picture, giving the patrons an evening of good fun with nothing to think about after the show is over. Running time, 67 minutes. Played May 27-28.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Errol Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—No doubt this is among the year's best pictures, but from the exhibitor's and box office standpoint, it is not in it. Played May 22-23.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Town and country patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Everyone liked this picture. Whole cast was splendid. Full of action.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—Cagney has always been a draw with us and didn't let us down this time. We're sorry he walks out on the producers. We did much above average business and recommend it for anywhere they like action.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

SNOWED UNDER: George Brent, Genevieve Tobin—Not much to this for entertainment. Too good a cast for the story.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SNOWED UNDER: George Brent, Genevieve Tobin—It has plenty of laughs and will get over.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

GB Pictures

ALIAS BULLDOG DRUMMOND: J. Hulbert, Fay Wray—Just fair program material.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

FIRST A GIRL: Jessie Matthews, Sonnie Hale—Fair program pictures.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNELL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—Well liked by all. Did average Sunday business. Drove operator nuts regulating sound. Running time, 89 minutes. Played May 31-June 2.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me
MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Rockefeller Center, New York

Grand National

LUCKY TERROR, THE: Hoot Gibson—A good western.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. Small town patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel & Hardy—In my opinion this comedy had too much grand opera singing but the comedy parts were swell and it seemed to please an average crowd of cash customers. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 15-16.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Rural and small town patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—The picture pleased. It is funny and has some fine music. —W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Franchot Tone, Madge Evans—Just fair material.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Fanchon Tone, Madge Evans—Okay melodrama done in a snappy style. Pleased better than some super-specials. Played June 5-6.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GARDEN MURDER CASE, THE: Edmund Lowe, Virginia Bruce—A good mystery story, well played, but hardly believe it is as good as some of the previous ones. Running time, 62 minutes. Played May 29-30.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Myrna Loy, Robert Montgomery—Just a fair comedy. Everybody likes Montgomery and Loy, but this was a poor story for them. —Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

RIFFRAFF: Jean Harlow, Spencer Tracy—Rightly titled and I thought it was "Riffraff" in entertainment, also. Harlow and Tracy deserve better roles.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy —First class picture. Pleased everyone. I did not think it as good as "Naughty Marietta." All the cast did wonderful work.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy —Had some walkouts on the first reel caused by the grand opera singing; however, this was just an introduction and when the picture gets started it is as fine a show as you could wish to screen. This pair can sure sing and act, too, and it is a rare treat to look at Miss MacDonald. I hope we have another as good soon. Running time, 113 minutes. Played May 17-18.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Rural and small town patronage.

ROSE MARIE: Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy —This seems to be about half opera and half a Mounted Police story. It appears to be somewhere near to a "Natural," as it will satisfy anyone from a sheepherder to a high-brow professor. It did very well and gave us a good turnout the last night in a severe rainstorm. Running time, 113 minutes. Played May 29-30.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—Believe this satisfied most of our patrons who saw it. However, we never will be able to entice very many into the theatre, in fact. we hardly more than paid for the film rental. Running time, 126 minutes. Played May 31-June 1.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—This picture is a credit to the industry and we had the greatest pleasure in presenting it to our patrons. We did above average business. Not a sellout but we do know we gave them something worth while.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

THREE GODFATHERS: Chester Morris, Irene Hervey—Just fair. Scenes too drawn out.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

TOUGH GUY: Jackie Cooper, Joseph Calleia—Fair program picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

TOUGH GUY: Jackie Cooper, Joseph Calleia—A pleasing little picture.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—We ran this as a free show for an electric company and did a "land office business." But everyone was pleased with the feature and I believe it would have been more than satisfactory on a regular program. Running time, 72 minutes. Played May 27.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

WIFE VERSUS SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Myrna Loy, Jean Harlow—Drew well and was a pleasing picture.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

Paramount

EVERY NIGHT AT EIGHT: George Raft, Alice Faye—They liked this one. Counter attractions kept the attendance 'way down. Played May 23.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

HANDS ACROSS THE TABLE: Carole Lombard, Fred MacMurray—Good show all the way through. Fred MacMurray a swell actor, Carole Lombard good to look at, which makes this very entertaining. Fair for all. Poor business. Running time, eight reels. Played May 31.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

TILL WE MEET AGAIN: Herbert Marshall, Gertrude Michael—An okay spy yarn. Audience seemed satisfied. Played May 26.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE, THE: Sylvia Sidney, Henry Fonda, Fred MacMurray—Paramount's best offering to date on the current season's line up. Folks are still talking about it. Played May 29-30.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND: Gail Patrick, Dean Jagger—Good western for Friday and Saturday showing. Zane Grey always has a finished story and this one is not an exception. Running time, seven reels. Played June 5-6.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Republic

CRIME OF DOCTOR CRESPI, THE: Erich von Stroheim, Harriet Russell—Scared two kids out, but quite a few adults left for a different reason. Played May 27-28.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

LAWLESS RANGE: John Wayne, Sheila Mannors —Average Wayne, which means O. K. Running time, 57 minutes. Played May 29-30.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

RKO Radio

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—This picture did not draw or please those who came, though I thought it a very good production. No business. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 10-11.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Rural and small town patronage.

ALICE ADAMS: Katharine Hepburn, Fred MacMurray—Hepburn had news to us R. K. O. hasn't given us any life around our house for so long we just look for a very ordinary night. This picture was fair but did not do business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

BECKY SHARP: Miriam Hopkins, Cedric Hardwicke—Played to the lowest gross ever played. It had color only. I put off playing this as long as possible, knowing what to expect and got it right on the nose. Don't play it if you can.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario. General patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—Best drawing power of any picture we have ever shown. Capacity attendance. Not an empty seat. Everyone satisfied. It's a great picture and will suit any kind of towns. Played May 16.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

IN PERSON: Ginger Rogers, George Brent—Very poor. Poor direction. Nothing to it; tiresome. Overacting and Rogers cannot sing. Not worth what I paid for it. Played May 31-June 1.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

LADDIE: John Beal, Gloria Stuart, Virginia Weidler—A very fine picture. You never hear any complaints when you play this kind. Virginia Weidler is grand and takes no back seat for Shirley Temple. Played this as a benefit to Girl Scouts. Played May 18-19.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Town and country patronage.

LADY CONSENTS, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall—Good. Pleased the ladies.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LADY CONSENTS, THE: Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall—Interesting picture of average calibre. Pleased the majority but drew only fair. Played May 20-21.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—Good comedy. Enjoyed by all.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—The picture pleased. It steps along at a good pace.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—Good fun for anybody's evening. Average draw. Played June 2.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LOVE ON A BET: Gene Raymond, Wendy Barrie—A fine picture that pleased everybody. Good for any kind of patrons anywhere. Plenty of action and comedy. Played May 30.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Bert Wheeler, Robert Woolsey—This pair does not go over very well. This was just what the title says, silly.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

THREE MUSKETEERS, THE: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Played to less than normal business and had a few unexplainable walkouts. Played May 2.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

TWO IN THE DARK: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—This is a fair picture.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

WITNESS CHAIR, THE: Ann Harding, Walter Abel—Very good.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

YELLOW DUST: Richard Dix, Leila Hyams—Just fair. The folks razzed it; it was a little too silly.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

BAD BOY: James Dunn, Dorothy Wilson—Fair. Nothing extra. James Dunn has had better stories to work in. Why not keep him there. Played May 29-30.—J.W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—As usual, Shirley is the whole show and pulls at your heart strings. Young and old love her.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

CHARLIE CHAN AT THE CIRCUS: Warner Oland, Keye Luke—Excellent Chan story. Should satisfy especially where these stories are popular. Average draw. Played May 22-23.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

COUNTRY BEYOND, THE: Rochelle Hudson, Paul Kelly—Very good entertainment. Pleased all.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Very good. Hersholt splendid. Quintuplets adorable. Will please all types.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Played this after almost every theatre in this vicinity. The picture is very good all the way through and would be good even without the Dionne babies. With them, it is a splendid production. Played June 6.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irvin S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—A good story. Good cast. Of course, Cobb is not another Will Rogers, but is a good type of character.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—The colored boys in the camps like Raft and boosted this to the highest Wednesday-Thursday gross in 1936. Played June 3-4.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. CCC camps and small town patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell, Leo Carillo—This suits Raft's type. Leo Carrillo almost stole the show. Good entertainment.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—Good show, plenty of action by Raft. Rosalind Russell very good to look at and the role she played was just splendidly fulfilled. Good enough for any house anytime. Running time, nine reels. Played June 7.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—Fair. Nothing extra. Not worth what I paid for it. Raft has done better. Played May 24-25.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A.: Wallace Beery, John Boles, Barbara Stanwyck—Fine work by the cast. Men will like this better than the women.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, John Boles, Barbara Stanwyck—An average photoplay made interesting by the hard work of Wallace Beery. Business was very much off. Played May 17-18.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MUSIC IS MAGIC: Alice Faye, Ray Walker—This one missed all around.—A. L. Lighter, Orpheum Theatre, Mellen, Wis. Small town patronage.

MY MARRIAGE: Claire Trevor, Kent Taylor—Fair; did not draw.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MY MARRIAGE: Claire Trevor, Kent Taylor—A great show; good for Sunday as it is sad mystery melodrama about love and marriage; full of pathos. Title is right but will not build business. If you get them in they will be satisfied. Running time, 7 reels. Played May 26-27.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND, THE: Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart—Very good picture. Warner Baxter exceptionally good. Reaction from patrons very pleasing. Played mid-week to very good business. Running time, 98 minutes. Played May 20-21.—J. E. Keegan, Strand Theatre, Grass Valley, Cal. Small town and rural patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND, THE: Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart—A-1 entertainment for all classes. A gripping story, fine direction and good acting.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND, THE: Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart—It was a flop at the box office. The picture is well produced but we are tired of the heavy stuff.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

SONG AND DANCE MAN: Paul Kelly, Claire Trevor—Trevor and Kelly are both good, but this picture was just fair.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

SONG AND DANCE MAN: Paul Kelly, Claire Trevor—An excellent production that pleased a fair sized crowd and they seemed to like it. What more can you ask? Do not be afraid to play this as it is entertainment plus. Running time, 72 minutes. Played June 3.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Razen, Ark. Rural and small town patronage.

STEAMBOAT ROUND THE BEND: Will Rogers, Anne Shirley—Did not draw well; one of Rogers' old productions and probably that was the reason. Only fair attendance. Not his best picture. Played May 23.—George Lodge, Green Lantern Theatre, Claymont, Del. Small town patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak—A great show. Worth playing anywhere. The "movie" fans don't often tell me better news than I heard after this was run.—Harold C. Allison, Baldwin Theatre, Baldwin, Mich. CCC camps and small town patronage.

THUNDER IN THE NIGHT: Edmund Lowe, Karen Morley—Even the passes wouldn't stay through this one. When the producers stop trying to run the independent theatres we will get better pictures. Played May 8-9.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—A show that should satisfy everyone, but the poor recording on film makes this one a very poor bet for any theatre. We ran this one night and were glad when it was over. Just no good sound. Running time, 9 reels. Played May 24.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Henry Fonda, Rochelle Hudson—Patrons were well pleased with this production. Miss Hudson has quite a following here. Business good. Played May 9.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—A great program picture; keeps you well on the edge of your seat; lots of speed and action. Played May 22-23.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

United Artists

MODERN TIMES: Charlie Chaplin, Paulette Goddard—If anything, this one is better than Charlie's "City Lights." Some of our folks said if he can sing why can't he talk? 'Why not give talkies a try, Charlie, or at least let the rest of your cast talk while you remain silent? Good, though! Played May 31-June 1.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GHOST GOES WEST, THE: Robert Donat, Jean Parker—Another British made picture that does not draw. I do not see why critics rated this high as it is very poor entertainment; at least my patrons thought so, and I thought so, too.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor, Ethel Merman—Not as good as we expect from Cantor.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

THESE THREE: Miriam Hopkins, Merle Oberon, Joe McCrea—Fine motion picture. Cast perfect. Great direction. Pleased very much.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

Universal

GREAT IMPERSONATION, THE: Edmund Lowe, Valerie Hobson—A splendid program. Should please all mystery loving public. This one keeps you guessing from start till the very last fade-out. Must say good, but business poor. Running time, seven reels. Played June 3.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey—I consider this just a fair attraction.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

IVORY HANDLED GUN: Buck Jones, Charlotte Wynters—Western fans satisfied. Little less than normal western business. Played May 16.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—Magnificent. Dunne and Taylor deserve highest of praises for their work in this picture.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—This was one of the best pictures we have ever had the privilege of showing. Our patrons took the trouble to let me know. We have had bigger business but never better appreciated.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

NEXT TIME WE LOVE: Margaret Sullavan, James Stewart—Pleased the woman. Poor drawing card.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

STORM OVER THE ANDES: Jack Holt, Mona Barrie—A good snappy aviation picture with just enough romance to make it interesting. There are some very fine shots in this picture and the photography is better than usual. Played May 29-30.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Small town and country patronage.

STORMY: Jean Rogers, Noah Beery, Jr.—Despite the holiday, we played to one of the largest houses in some weeks. Picture very acceptable. Played May 30.—C. W. Mills, Arcade Theatre, Sodus, N. Y. Family patronage.

SWEET SURRENDER: Frank Parker, Tamara—Fair program picture; played to small business; good entertainment. Running time, 9 reels. Played May 29-30.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

Warner Bros.

BOULDER DAM: Ross Alexander, Patricia Ellis—A fair program picture.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

COLLEEN: Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Joan Blondell—Warners are slipping badly on their musicals. Too bad to use so many great stars in a poor picture. My movie fans have a way of knowing the good and the bad pictures before I show them, and they act accordingly.—Leon C. Bolduc, Majestic Theatre, Conway, N. H. General patronage.

COLLEEN: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie—This picture was too slow; it did not please the young folks.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

COLLEEN: Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell, Jack Oakie—An amusing film on the whole. Not the usual Warner musical but a good program picture. Played May 24-25.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FRESHMAN LOVE: Patricia Ellis, Warren Hull—Fine little picture for your week end spot, action and comedy aplenty. It will especially please the young folks and that is the biggest part of our customers. It drew better than average business. Running time, 65 minutes. Played May 22-23.—F. L. Clarke, Cozy Theatre, Hazen, Ark. Rural and small town patronage.

I MARRIED A DOCTOR: Pat O'Brien, Josephine Hutchinson—The picture pleased and did some extra business. O'Brien did his part well.—W. H. Hardman, Royal Theatre, Frankfort, Kan. Small town patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors, George E. Stone—A fair western. Stone is really the best character in the picture. Somehow the western pictures seem to show up best at the box office. If your patrons like this style of picture, play this one. It has some very good photographic shots. Played June 5-6.—O. Ingmar Oleson, Sons of Norway Theatre, Ambrose, N. D. Town and country patronage.

WALKING DEAD, THE: Karloff, Marguerite Churchill—Much too gruesome and unsavory for good entertainment. It is well done, however, and may please in some spots. Played May 19.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Short Features

Columbia

KANNIBAL KAPERS: Krazy Kat Cartoons—A funny cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

"PATCH MAH BRITCHES": Barney Google—A good color cartoon with some good angles.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

OLD SAWBONES: Andy Clyde—Lots of laughs in this one. Running time, 17 minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

STARS OF TOMORROW: No. 5—These reels put pep in any program. Running time, 10 minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Educational

BARNYARD AMATEURS: Paul Terry-Toons—Okay cartoon.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

BEWARE OF BLONDES: Young Romance Series—Just a fair two reeler with some laughs and good music. Running time, 2 reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

CLEVER CRITTERS: Treasure Chest—Animals that do tricks. Good and unusual.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

FLICKER FEVER: Frolics of Youth—Five walkouts on this one. Terrible.—J. W. Lehrkind, New Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

FRESH FROM THE FLEET: Buster West, Tom Patricola—Not up to the standard this pair can deliver. Fair.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FRIENDLY SPIRITS: Ernest Truex—Fair enough. Some slant on how to get rid of your mother-in-law if you don't like to have her around. That's the way we looked at it. Running time, two reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

GIV'IM AIR: Star Personality Comedies—Good comedy; plenty of laughs and music. Running time, 2 reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

THREE MORE SHOWMEN JOIN CONTRIBUTORS

The latest voluntary additions to the ranks of showmen reporters to "What the Picture Did for Me" hail from as widely situated states as Montana, Kansas and California. They are:

J. E. Keegan, Strand Theatre, Grass Valley, Cal.

Alonzo Swenson, Lincoln Theatre, Clay Center, Kansas.

R. B. Stiert, Star Theatre, Bridger, Mont.

JUST PLAIN FOLKS: Tim and Irene—This is better than usual. Quite a few laughs in it.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

KNOCKOUT DROPS: Frolics of Youth—Fair comedy.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacok, N. H. General patronage.

TARS AND STRIPES: Buster Keaton—Keaton always puts over a good laugh; provokingly funny as he does not crack a smile while acting. Looks like he must live a grouch life as he acts. O. K. Buster. Running time, 2 reels.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

WAY OUT WEST: Cabin Kids—Okay offering from the cute Cabin Kids.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

COUNT TAKES THE COUNT, THE: Charley Chase—Pretty weak! Charlie's comedies don't stand out as good fun like they used to. Silly plots like this one aren't really funny.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

EARLY BIRD AND THE WORM, THE: Harman-Ising Series—A very, very cute little story with fine color. Running time, 9 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

HOW TO SLEEP: M-G-M Miniatures—Very good. We get all of them eventually. Running time, 9 minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

PERFECT TRIBUTE, THE: Chic Sale Special—A swell subject. We used it on Memorial Day and did it fit? Surely everyone should see this little feature. Running time, 18 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Paramount

SIRENS OF SYNCOPATION: Headliners—The swellest Lady's Band we have ever seen and heard. It's a knockout. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

SYMPHONY IN BLACK: Headliners—Nothing to it, even the music is bad. Recording worse than when the sound came in. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

TIME FOR LOVE: Color Classics—A very good cartoon all in color. Good to look at. Running time, one reel.—Rudolf Duba, Royal Theatre, Kimball, S. D. Small town patronage.

RKO Radio

FOOLISH HEARTS: Radio Musical Comedies—A few odds and ends stuck together between a couple of good vocal and orchestra renditions. Fair.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

GASOLOONS: Edgar Kennedy Comedies—Edgar goes great in this. The usual laughs from this scrappy family.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

INSIDE THE ROPES: Sports with Bill Corum—An interesting sport subject.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

LAND OF EVANGELINE: World on Parade—Fair travelogue. Color would help these. Starts off slowly and our folks lost interest.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

NIGHT LIFE: Headliner Series—Awful. Time waster from Cameraman to theatre janitor. No sense to this one.—J. W. Lehrkind, New Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

WINGED PAGENTRY: Struggle to Live.—Good. About birds of the sea.—J. W. Lehrkind, Strand Theatre, White Sulphur Springs, Mont. Local patronage.

WINTER SPORTS: Sports with Bill Corum—Splendid winter sporting events pictured and described by Bill Corum interestingly.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

FLOWERS FOR MADAME: Merrie Melodies—Another fine color subject from the Merrie Melodies series. Running time, 7 minutes.—Horn and Morgan, Inc., Star Theatre, Hay Springs, Neb. Small town patronage.

Speers Changes Newspapers

After four years, Fred W. Speers, dramatic editor of the Denver Post, has resigned to become city editor of the Wyoming Tribune-Leader at Cheyenne, Wyo. No successor has been named as yet.

New Brewton Theatre Planned

R. J. ("Hap") Barnes is constructing a new theatre at Brewton, Ala., and work is expected to be finished in time to open the house on or about August 1.

Fund Collections Grow

David O. Selznick, chairman of the United Jewish Relief Fund, states that $78,000 of the $125,000 motion picture quota has been reached. Universal, he said, was first over the top, having collected $6,000 on a $5,000 quota.

Indiana Theatre Condemned

The State theatre at Hammond, Ind., has been condemned by the state fire marshal and has been ordered razed. The walls are sagged so that lives of pedestrians are endangered. The city fire marshal condemned the building several years ago. The theatre was the scene of a bombing in 1927, when a labor dispute arose.

Hagen Forms New Unit

Julius Hagen of Twickenham Film Studios, Ltd., London, is forming a special production unit to make two pictures a year starring Dolly Haas under the direction of Hans Brahm. This is the combination which made "Broken Blossoms."

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 28.—(A) How is amplification secured in a three-element tube? (B) Name the essential things served by projection room ventilation. Watch your step.

Answer to Question No. 21

Bluebook School Question No. 21 was: (A) Should other things besides fire hazard be considered in storing film? (B) What length of film suffices for loops in a motion picture projector? (C) What is the voltage drop across a 6-ohm resistor carrying 0.5 of an ampere?

Those providing satisfactory answers were: S. Evans and S. Rau; D. Danielson; A. L. Cooper; B. Devietti; W. C. Brown; R. A. Hooker; W. Limmroth; T. F. Bocherto; J. R. Prater; J. A. Callahan; G. E. (A) The following answers to Section A have been selected for publication: D. Danielson says, "Yes, things other than fire hazard should be considered in storing film. Means should be provided in the storage vault or cabinet for humidifying the air surrounding the stored films."

A. L. Cooper says, "In past years the storage of film in theatre projection rooms has been considered largely from the viewpoint of fire hazard. If film were kept in a humid atmosphere when not in use it would remain much more tough and pliable and therefore less likely to sustain injury. To accomplish this the film should be rewound immediately after projection and stored in a cabinet with sufficient water surface therein; not less than 36 square inches to each reel, and always kept filled. Thus the film would regain at least a portion of the moisture driven off by the high temperature of the 'spot.' For this method of storage to be highly efficient, each theatre must store the films as above set forth."

B. Devietti says, "New film is very pliable, tough and easy to handle because of its relatively high moisture content, which same is partially evaporated each time the film passes through the high-temperature "spot" at the projector aperture. Evaporation also continues when film is stored in a dry place. The effect of all this is that unless this moisture content be returned to the film, it soon becomes dry and brittle, breaking and tearing quite easily, especially at splices and the sprocket holes. Proper storage will do much to restore moisture and thus compensate for the effect of heat during projection. This may be accomplished only if the films be stored in a cabinet containing a sufficient area of water surface to provide for humid air within the cabinet, a means, preferably automatic, being provided for automatically maintaining the water level at all times."

(B) J. R. Prater says, "since the film moves intermittently past the projector aperture three-quarters of an inch at a time, the upper and lower loops must each contain at least a little more than that much slack film. Larger loops do no harm unless the film rubs on the fire shields, although sometimes large loops will be noisy. The lower loop must of course properly synchronize the picture with the sound head."

W. C. Brown says, "Length of film required for loops is 0.75 of an inch and a trifle more. However, since this length makes no allowance for framing with the type of projector where the loop changes, it is best to allow about 1.50 inches of film for loops. Of course, however, if everything is as it should be, there will be no necessity for framing during projection."

R. A. Hooker answers, "Most projectionists exercise their own judgment in the matter of loop size, but they must of course be large enough so there will always be some slack film when the loop is at its shortest, referring of course, especially, to the intermittent loop. But on the other hand they must not be large enough to rub on the fireshield."

O. L. Daris and F. Simms say, "We do not understand this question to mean the length in inches, but rather a description of each loop. The upper loop should be so made that the loop may be as large as possible and not make contact with metal. The intermittent movement loop requires at least one inch to function properly, as the film moves 0.75 of an inch each time, and a less clearance than 0.25 of an inch would invite trouble. However, the loop should be made as large as practicable without contacting metal. There should be at least one inch of slack film. The last loop must of course be such as will permit fulfillment of the 20 frames between apertures provision."

A. L. Leonard replies, "Loop size must be such as will, except for accident, provide for smooth operation, with sufficient added loop-length to provide for framing. The film moves exactly 0.75 of an inch at each picture cycle, hence the loops must (a) be 0.75 of an inch plus sufficient added length as above, and (b) of length to provide for 20 frames between aperture centers."

(C) C. J. Jones, F. W. Gumbel and L. Storck answer, "Using the formula $C=IR$, we have, substituting figures, $E=6\times0.5=3$, hence the voltage drop is three volts."

In fact, every one of those named as supplying satisfactory answers said precisely the same thing, in effect.

Please remember that the "school" mail is very large and that so far as possible you should use typewriter size paper (8½×11 inches), placing your name and the question number at the very top of the first page.

MORRIS LEONARD HEADS CHICAGO EXHIBITOR UNIT

Attorney for B&K Will Assume Post to Be Vacated by Jack Miller on July 1st

by BILL CROUCH

in Chicago

Morris Leonard, legal and real estate counsel for B & K theatres, has been named to take over the job as head of the Chicago Exhibitors Association when Jack Miller's resignation takes effect July 1 after 12 years of tenure.

The offices of the group will be moved to the State-Lake building if present plans work out. Offices are now in the Standard Oil building, where numerous other theatre groups are located.

It is understood that the new set-up for the Exhibitors Association will not call for as much activity as in the past. Requirements are not as exacting.

It is also learned that Mr. Leonard will continue to serve as counsel for B & K.

Plans for the coming year will be announced shortly after Mr. Leonard takes office. General opinion is that the association will be held together so that should a need for it arise in the future it will be already organized and equipped.

Details for the Jack Miller Testimonial Dinner are fast being worked out, according to Aaron Saperstein, head of the committee. Invitations are out and from reports it will be one of the most elaborate and most widely attended affairs in Chicago's theatrical history. The banquet—for gentlemen only—will be held Friday night, June 26, at the Palmer House in the Red Lacquer Room.

Evanston will have a new theatre, as the result of a lease just signed between Northwestern University and the newly formed 1700 Central Building corporation. This will result in an 1,800-seat playhouse—the largest in that city.

It is understood the local GCS Circuit, Inc., will control the bookings of the new playhouse. Eugene D. Seipp is president of the 1700 Central Building corporation. S. G. Robbins was broker in the lease transaction. Ralph K. Ball was attorney for the university and Homer F. Carey for the lessee.

Designed by J. E. O. Pridmore, who was architect for both the Varsity and Valencia theatres of Evanston, the new cinema will be erected at the southwest corner of Central street and Eastwood avenue, a section of the North Shore at present without any picture house.

The property, leased from Northwestern University for 35 years, fronts 150 feet on Central and 140 on Eastwood. The new theatre will stand in the rear of the present row of one-story stores with a wide entrance at the west end of the property, where three of the present shops will be wrecked. The remaining shops will be modernized and both stores and playhouse will be air-conditioned.

Of terra cotta and glass, the theatre entrance will be ultramarine blue, white and gold. The auditorium will contain 1,400 main floor seats and a small loge balcony seating 400. The theatre has tentatively been named The Stadium.

Architect Pridmore was a pioneer in the sky effect auditorium, used for the first time in the Cort theatre. He recently designed two playhouses for the Texas centennial at Dallas.

Edward Fontaine, Paramount district manager for the Chicago, Milwaukee, Indianapolis and Detroit exchanges, held a sales meeting for salesmen, bookers and ad managers of these offices last Saturday at the Palmer House. To the 32 attending, Fontaine outlined the new product that was announced last week at the sales meeting for executives here and also told the men of sales policies.

"The King Steps Out," Grace Moore's latest starring picture, which played at the Chicago theatre last week, returned Wednesday to the Loop and is now current at the United Artists theatre. B & K executives, who felt the picture did not gross what it should on the first Loop engagement, brought it back for the clientele of the United Artists. "Under Two Flags," after two weeks at the Chicago, was another film brought back into the Loop after two weeks. It was set in at the Apollo and started off at a fast pace. "Bullets and Ballots" at the Roosevelt was moved into the Garrick and it too is doing excellent business. "Private Number," which did unexpectedly well at the Chicago, was moved into the Roosevelt.

Ruth Doyle, secretary of the Seattle Film Board of Trade, returned westward last Tuesday after spending a part of her vacation with Miss Emma Abplanalp, local film-board secretary.

Henri Elman is in New York lining up more product for the coming season. Elman's Capitol Film Exchange, it was learned, will have about twice the amount of product to offer.

Walter Brown of Ross Federal is on a tour of the various offices of his territory. After he completes his tour he will take a vacation trip.

Henry Herbel and Clyde Eckhardt are in New York. Herbel is attending the Universal sales meeting and Eckhardt is attending to business at his home office. Eckhardt will stop over in New York long enough to see the Joe Louis-Max Schmeling battle.

Mildred Early, of the QUIGLEY PUBLICATIONS staff in Hollywood, stopped over in Chicago between trains the first of the week en route to Toronto, Canada, by way of Detroit, on her vacation.

Another Hollywoodian, Oma Jane Wilson, secretary to director Irving Cummings at 20th Century-Fox, was a Chicago visitor this week. Miss Wilson is on a trip to New York and other eastern points. She will return to Hollywood late in July.

Bobby Breen, youngest conventioneer, en route to the RKO-Radio sales meeting in New York, was a visitor for a few hours. He was with his sister, and reporters at the train besieged the youngster for stories and pictures. He will appear at the sales convention while in the East and then return to Hollywood for his picture which Sol Lesser will produce for RKO.

Irving Mack has taken to trade-paper reporting again. This time it is in the easier fashion. He writes letters to the office and lets the copyreader worry.

Due to an agreement with other railroad lines operating in the west, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy will drop its plan of showing motion pictures in the diners of Denver-Chicago trains.

Although the plan has met with a marked degree of success with the Burlington, the other railroads have not found the plan to their liking and the Burlington will cease to show the films to passengers after July 6th.

Originally set for a two-weeks' test, the idea proved popular with train travelers and the company continued it. They found their seating capacity of 38 persons inadequate when the travel was heavy as most of the passengers wanted to see the films offered. Booked through Films, Inc., the pictures were shown on 16mm. equipment and the subject matter was the latest of major productions, both features and shorts. The first picture booked on the train was Paramount's "Anything Goes," which met with the utmost approval of the travelers, who seemed to like musical comedy while traveling.

Whether or not the showing of pictures would be adopted by railroads generally within a short time was not brought out by Burlington executives. Deals with various railroad companies by concerns that supplied films, equipment and operators have failed to materialize, they said.

The general plan for recreation while traveling on trains will result from a conference of railway officials this fall, it is learned. Indications are that one special recreation car will take care of such things rather than a converted diner or club car.

GB Names Talent Scout

Michael Balcon, Gaumont British production head, has appointed Maud Gilroy, London talent scout for the company. Mrs. Gilroy has had experience in numerous theatrical ventures and will cover West End productions, repertory theatres and music halls in her search for new faces.

Freddy Jablons, press agent for Loew's Valencia, Hillside and Willard theatres, Jamaica, Long Island, has left there to become promotion manager of the Newark Ledger.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

INVENTION INVITED

Walk down any Broadway or Main Street in a hundred cities and see theatres big and small bravely displaying freshly-laundered "comfortably cool" valances that flap invitingly in the summer breezes. How they lure when the thermometer is high and the asphalt soft—it's a hardy soul who will not be tempted.

But comes a raw day with sky overcast and the temperature sulking down below—a day when steam-heated flats and open fireplaces are in order. Then does your smart manager snap out to take down the "cool" banners and keep 'em out of sight until old lady Summer gets over her chill?

Your manager does not!

Psychologically there is nothing more certain to keep folks away from the boxoffice than a shipload of "cool" decorations on one of those days.

There ought to be an invention to operate automatically upon "weather" hangings when the temperature drops. But until that comes along, theatremen might save a lot of admissions by rigging up cool banners so they may be removed easily and quickly when the occasion arises.

MAY HELP IN SMALLER SPOTS

That Barney Joffee's theatre pass "sampling" idea, much discussed recently in these pages, may be more effective in the smaller communities is confirmed in part by the letter on a following page from Manager J. Glenn Caldwell, who enthuses over the slant as a result of its accomplishments in his territory.

As an instance, Caldwell recites the returns brought about by giving guest tickets to the editor of the weekly in a nearby town where the folks were accustomed to traveling longer distances to other spots for their picture entertainment. Ye ed, in return, came out with a sweet story in his next issue praising Caldwell's house and urging the townsfolk to attend, which prompts the manager to say:

"It looks like we were not doing our job in not seeing the gentleman before now but I'll wager there are a lot of people in every locality that don't know the type of theatre in the nearby town, and if a pass will get them in for the first time, I sure believe in dishing out that pass. . . . I intend using Joffee's ideas in all the surrounding towns that do not have a theatre. . . . "

There is something to be said in favor of the idea when used in nearby communities without adequate theatre facilities for the purpose of encouraging extra regular patronage. But any grand-scale results as sought by Joffee in his recent adventure must, because of location and opposition, be limited in producing more sales at the ticket-window.

ARE YOUR EARS RED?

No, folks, sez we and patiently, too, there are no dues or money payments of any kind asked for to join up in the Round Table Club. This information is run regularly, but for the benefit of some who still want to know how much it costs to belong—it costs nothing to belong.

A member pays his "dues" by reporting to the Round Table at not too infrequent intervals what he is doing to build up those lines at the boxoffice. These activities are chronicled in the pages for the benefit of the next laddie, who in turn does the same—or at least that's the way it should work.

Catch on—or are your ears red?

KIDDING THEATRE ADVERTISING

The gentle spoofing in print of one's product is a newer form of merchandising utilized and evidently with good results by a growing number of advertisers. The kidding note in copy has served many purposes but not to any extent in picture theatre newspaper advertising.

Therefore, the two-column splash on "Dracula's Daughter," reproduced on another page and employed by talented Hal Kopplin, Wometco Theatres ad chieftain, is presented to the readers for their study and reaction. Toning down the horror angle by clever gag lines and using pretty-girl art to chase the spooks, Kopplin reports the new selling angle as helpful indeed in bringing in good business on the date.

Private Screening Held for Horse

Giving a private screening of "Strictly Confidential" to a famous racehorse was novel stunt pulled by G. H. E. Selway, Trocadero Theatre, Liverpool, England, tying up to the racing background of the picture. Horse was escorted to the theatre by Major Lockett of the Cheshire Hunt and crowds collected at theatre to witness the spectacle. Newspapers gave breaks with photos of horse standing in the aisle watching the picture. Accompanying shot shows the mare in the lobby.

For "39 Steps," Selway secured sixteen mannequins who displayed the styles from the picture in the Home and Fashion Exhibition in Liverpool. Jane Baxter, GB star opened the exhibition and introduced the mannequins.

Let There Be Rain; And There Was Rain

An unusual stunt was put on for "One Rainy Afternoon" by Thornton Sargent, Four Star Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., when, for a bally, he secured a professional rainmaker who used rockets and similar trick equipment to bring rain while crowds gathered to watch. Gag broke papers with neat stories.

Special break in classified section was garnered using stills in connection with want ads. Nationwide contest for suitable Pickford-Lasky trademark also came in for publicity. Special transcriptions were planted on radio stations and songs plugged by club orchestras.

John Barrymore Writes Review for "Fauntleroy"

Neville Reay, assistant to Russell Birdwell of the Selznick Studios spent two weeks in San Francisco working with manager Herman Cohen at the United Artists Theatre for the opening of "Little Lord Fauntleroy." One of the largest breaks was a review of the picture written by John Barrymore commenting on the performance of Dolores Costello Barrymore.

Another big stunt was race between homing pigeons and a midget racing auto from front of theatre to Redwood City, 30 miles away; event was given advance buildup. 200 pigeons were released from crate and the auto, under police escort started for Redwood. Upsetting dopesters, the car won, averaging 50 miles an hour, while the birds did 45.

Three Weeks Advance Sells "Show Boat"

A special sound truck with p.a. system and all decked out with streamers, pennants, etc. (see photo), was used by Jack Granara, RKO Keith Memorial, Boston for "Show Boat." Large overhead art display was planted at entrance with art head of Irene Dunne and smaller ones of Jones, Winninger and Morgan.

Three weeks ahead special animated display was constructed for lobby, representing the rear of a Mississippi River show boat with smoke stacks, etc. Paddle wheels revolved and on various blades were art heads of stars and featured players together with scenes from the picture. Maxwell House salesmen placed special posters in all grocery windows, stores distributing regular exchange heralds to customers with all outgoing orders.

Music stores were supplied with imprinted music wrappers and scene stills, orchestra leaders contacted and special invitations mailed to all leading music critics and music teachers. Window display was arranged in department store tying in national cotton goods week with bales of cotton and stills from picture.

Through cooperation of General Foods, it was arranged to distribute copies of "Songs of the Show Boat" to the first 1,500 ladies attending matinee performance, these were imprinted with theatre and playdates. Public library distributed imprinted bookmarks, this was augmented by display of books and stills, and fifteen foot reproductions of boat with heads of various stars were planted in leading store windows.

Marriage License Bureau Tied Up for "Brides"

Each couple taking out a marriage license during the showing of "Brides Are Like That" were ducated by Sammy Siegel, Warner's Hollywood and Downtown Theatres. Couples were presented with neatly printed congratulatory cards bearing invitation and Sammy reports this is the first time the bureau ever permitted distribution of advertising material.

For "I Married a Doctor," Siegel showed the picture to the president, secretary and board member of the Women's Auxiliary of the Los Angeles County Medical Association, comments of these ladies were printed verbatim on cards and distributed to their complete mailing list. Copy at bottom of card read: "Should you attend, please bring this card with you and leave it at the boxoffice to show how we patronize pictures deserving of our association's support."

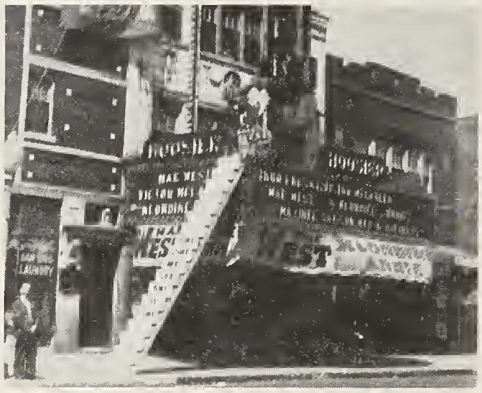
Winner of Silver Misses Few Bets On 'Annie' Date

Mayor McNamara Receiving West Wire



Waterson's "Come Up and See Me" Steps

Keeping in mind that Whiting, Ind., is surrounded on all sides by larger cities, with Chicago but twenty minutes away, the town boasting one paper published by a local job printer and local ordinances prohibiting most things, R. V. Waterson, Hoosier Theatre, managed to obtain plenty of breaks on his "Klondike Annie" campaign which netted him the Quigley Silver plaque.

Contacting his local merchants, they went whole-heartedly for his Mae Days tieup. Window cards offering "a gold mine of values not even the like Klondike produced" were distributed, every story and ad sold the picture directly or indirectly and well in advance teaser ads were planted in paper. A lifetime pass was offered to baby girl born on opening day of picture and named for Miss West; Watty says that while unfortunately there were no babes born, the stunt caused plenty of excitement.

Wire and bouquet of flowers sent from the coast by Mae West to Mayor McNamara were presented on the theatre stage (see photo) before capacity house on day before opening, thus Watty garnered considerable extra revenue on the date. Photos and stories were used by the paper, blowups planted in theatre lobby, and windows of cooperating merchants.

Life size pass was also presented to merchant having best trimmed Mae Days window, thus some lively competition was engendered among the stores, each vying with the other and of course selling "Klondike Annie."

Artist Stationed in Lobby

For his lobby, artist was stationed in booth doing pen and pencil sketches of male patrons "in an effort to aid Miss West find a new face for her bar room floor." Watty says the artist's ability to talk fluently and amusingly while sketching was a decided factor in the success of the stunt.

Another stunt Watty used was the distribution of lucky number heralds offering guest tickets to those finding corresponding numbers which were prominently displayed in cooperating merchants' stores.

Roving photographer covered streets offering to take pictures, these were developed while the customers waited and when presented, recipients found their faces in space provided above a streamlined figure of Mae West. In front of theatre steps were built leading to marquee, copy on steps (see photo) reading "Come up and see me sometime"; atop marquee was large cutout of Miss West. With Whiting boasting the world's largest oil refinery in the Standard Oil plant, Waterson offered twenty guest tickets to employees who matched their badge numbers with those posted in front of theatre.

Contest was planted in paper, showing still of West and McLaglen, entrants were to supply dialogue for which tickets were awarded. On all empty store windows "Annie doesn't live here any more" cards were pasted, an old silent screen was placed on side wall of theatre, slides projected from roof of building across the street proved an effective traffic stopper and through tieup with auto dealer, fleet of cars was lined up at theatre offering free rides home from the show.

Bill Loomis and Norman Johnstone aided.

Stallman Paints 'Mr. Deeds' Title On Mountainside

"Mr Deeds goes to town"

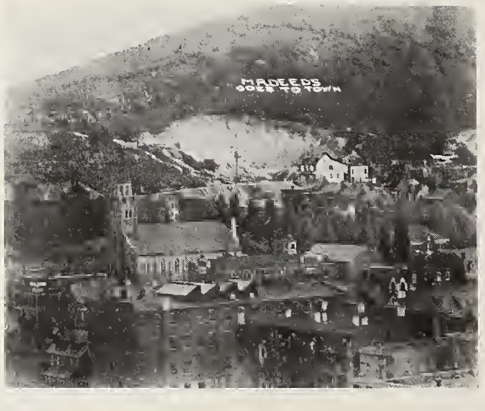
"Mr. Deeds" Giant Lobby Pad



Stallman's Painted Title on Mountainside

On the outskirts of Bethlehem, Pa., there is a range of mountains, the extreme end of which is almost perpendicular and plainly visible to autos and pedestrians from most of the neighboring sections, therefore, with a composition comprised mostly of powdered lime, Bronze winner Lester Stallman, College Theatre, painted "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" on the side of the mountain in letters thirty feet high (see photo).

Les reports that this stunt caused more interest and comment than anything he has ever tried and so far as he can learn was the first time the mountain had ever been painted.

Italian Population Circularized

With a large Italian population in the city, extra publicity was garnered in the Italian paper, stressing the Frank Capra angle. Co-op page was planted, readers invited to write letters on "What I would do if I inherited $20,000,000." Blanks on which letters were to be written were available only at stores of cooperating merchants.

Giant memo pad carrying picture message was displayed in lobby week in advance (see photo), as was personal endorsement letter blowup. Authentic ensemble worn by Miss Arthur in the production was displayed in foyer ten days ahead, and removed to store window during engagement.

Five and ten also featured a window display of the oversized memo pad message reading "the world's largest pen has to be used to tell about the year's greatest picture 'Mr. Deeds Goes to Town,' starts Friday for one glorious week."

Teaser Ads Run in Advance

Personal notices were run in want ad section of paper, milk bottle tops were used by leading dairy, inserts placed in laundry bundles and advance heralds were printed for house to house distribution. Entire house staff wore imprinted chest bands, posters were used on news agency delivery trucks and 22 x 28's were placed on ceilings of barber shops around town.

Starting three weeks in advance, ushers and ticket takers wore shoulder sashes announcing engagement and all employees started a whispering campaign.

What was reported by Lester to be particularly effective was in addition to regulation trailer, a special announcement made by him from the stage with lights up and curtain's drawn. Endorsement of picture was made each performance.

Philadelphia and New York daily papers have a wide circulation in Bethlehem and in those papers containing rave notices of the reviews at the N. Y. Music Hall and Philadelphia Stanley, Stallman inserted his heralds on the forthcoming attraction.

Bumper strips were used on autos throughout the run, merchants' paper bags imprinted three weeks ahead and announcements made in regular house programs.

Entire window of two of city's leading music stores tied up with musical instruments, stressing particularly the tuba.

Atlantans Given Free Rein In Putting Over Pictures

Newspaper Cooperation Found Most Valuable in Attracting Patrons

by EARLE E. GRIGGS
Atlanta Correspondent

> Little competition, excellent newspaper relations and plenty of latitude to managers in putting over their shows makes Atlanta something of a standout among those key-cities where these findings do not obtain. The local papers are said to be extremely picture-conscious and with the various theatremen cooperate on contests, tie-ins and other angles in which ready assistance is given by leading stores. Exploitation in the southern city has always been of high standard, and represented frequently among the Quigley Award winners are showmen attached to the Atlanta units of such circuits as Loew's and Lucas and Jenkins.

Atlanta has been called a "branch office city," meaning that much of its business is that of branches of concerns having main offices in the eastern section, and to a certain extent this is true. But Atlanta is also a manufacturing center, particularly of textiles, it boasting of no less than a score of huge cotton mills; also foundries, leather factories, paper mills, flour mills, etc.

Boasting of nearly 300,000 inhabitants in the city proper, it has a half dozen small municipalities surrounding it within street car distance, which swells what is called Metropolitan Atlanta to close to 400,000 persons.

It has four de luxe theatres downtown and two smaller theatres, all within the fire limits of the business area, and about fifteen suburban houses, practically all of which might be denominated as de luxe, many of which have been built in the past five years, and all of which have been remodeled and brought up to date within that period.

Lucas and Jenkins Predominate

Four of the downtown houses are operated by Lucas & Jenkins, lessees from Publix, one is a Loew de luxer, and another is an independent, operated by W. T. Murray, a pioneer exhibitor and a native of Atlanta. Six of the suburban houses are operated by Lucas & Jenkins and five by Louis Bach, while two others are operated by Oscar S. Oldknow and partners. Oldknow also is interested in the Bach theatres. Seating capacity of all theatres in and near Atlanta (meaning those in the Metropolitan Atlanta area) is close to 35,000, houses downtown being the Fox, 4,500; Loew's Grand, 2,200; Paramount, 2,100; Georgia, 2,100; Capitol, 1,800, and Rialto, 800, these figures being approximate.

The population of Atlanta is predominantly Protestant and a great majority of the working classes are the white collar and skilled labor element, its union organization, the Atlanta Federation of Trades, having about 5,000 members, including organized public school teachers and public works workers.

FOR RENT
McKALLIP Co
ROAD GANG

TORTURE RACK. Before leaving the Davis in Pittsburgh for the Harris in Etna, Pa., Ed Siegal used dummy atop marquee for his "Road Gang" date. Stunt created quite a furore.

The maximum admission fee at theatres here is 40 cents evenings, 30 cents afternoons, 25 cents all the time to balconies and 10 cents for children at all hours, while the suburbans invariably have a 10 cents and 15 cents admission to matinee shows and 10 cents and 20 cents to night shows.

The city is almost wholly a "star" city, pictures boasting well-known names drawing definitely better than pictures having spectacular and glamorous settings.

Street cars and private automobiles are about on a par in popularity for transportation to the downtown theatres, the carfare being seven and a half cents and parking fees in plenty of garages 25 cents, while parking lots usually require a 15 cents fee for a few hours' accommodation—and there are plenty of the latter. Transportation to and from the theatres at night is not a problem. One theatre tried the experiment of paying parking fees with each admission ticket, but soon found that it added such a small amount to the box-office that it soon was discontinued as a lure to patrons.

Booking of all theatres is in the hands of booking offices locally located, and the heads of these select and book the pictures, including the short subjects. However, practically every manager is his own inspiration as to his methods of exploitation, each being budgeted as to expenditure, but given a free rein as to methods of advertising and exploitation within the limits of his budget. Very little spectacular ballyhoo is resorted to as the patronage of the theatres, wise to the "ballyhoo," usually resents any effort to "shoo" it into the houses by wild efforts of street advertising. (It might be added here as significant that the bank night lure has brought thousands to theatres in the suburbs, but as a usual thing patrons on those nights that premiums are given do not give a hoot what is on the screen; it is the "bonus" in which they are interested. It may be further added that two of the daily papers in Atlanta have perpetual theatre tieups which offer free tickets for certain types of want ads or with want ads to run a definite length of time and are paid for in advance.) This may prove something as to a certain class—and rather a large class, too—of theatregoer who is looking for a bit of lagnappe with his patronage.

Practically perfect projection is a feature of every theatre, and practically every manager is a fanatic for smooth running and projection of pictures, which has resulted in screen offering of an almost perfect nature, with operators constantly on the alert for breaks, sound interruptions, etc. In a majority of theatres, one of the attaches has as his special duty that of watching the screen and immediately reporting the slightest deviation from the perfect. A result of this alertness is projection of the most pleasing kind.

Local Papers Work With Theatres

The Atlanta newspapers are definitely cooperative with the theatres, each of the three carrying a special section in the Sunday editions devoted exclusively to the theatres, and on these pages are carried feature stories not only of local offerings, but gossip of coming pictures from screen writers both in Hollywood and New York. The Atlanta Georgian has a daily feature from Louella Parsons, of Universal Service; the Atlanta Journal carries a daily feature from Bob Fidler, of the United Press, and the Atlanta Constitution has a daily feature from Mollie Merrick, of the North American Newspaper Alliance. In addition to this each daily paper has a screen reviewer who carries reviews of all pictures immediately after opening date, and each paper carries an KIDDING THE HORROR ANGLE. Deciding that the chill-stuff in Miami was not as boxoffice as it used to be, Hal Kopplin, ad chief Wometco Theatres, took the unusual slant of kidding the date at the local Capitol on "Dracula's Daughter" with copy such as is illustrated in the two-column ad above, blown up for space requirements.

Hollywood Opening Held in Vienna

What was reported by Michael Havas to be a regular Hollywood opening for "Top Hat" was put on by Siegfried Bernfield, advertising and publicity manager of the Apollo Theatre in Vienna. The "who's who" of Vienna's musical circles were present at the opening, outstanding among whom were Franz Lehar, Emmerich Kalman, Jan Kiepura and others. Notables were introduced over radio. Pictures were taken of celebrities as they arrived and later in the evening these shots were shown on screen, as were wires from Rogers and Astaire.

Girls in white dresses and top hats distributed to the ladies small toppers filled with candy, which were promoted from candy manufacturer. Large album for congratulatory signatures on the arrival of Astaire Junior was placed in lobby, book later mailed to the star.

60-Day Exploitation Drives Precede Japan First-Runs

To properly launch a picture in Japan, advertising and exploitation campaigns commence two months prior to the first release date, and continues until the picture goes into general distribution, reports Frank Kennedy, RKO Radio manager for Japan. Publicity is confined chiefly to trade papers and fan magazines. There are scores of fan magazines on the market, most of which enjoy splendid circulation for the Japanese as a class are perhaps the most "movie minded" in the world.

In this territory of approximately 93,000,000 people there are about 1,700 theatres, many of which cater exclusively to Jananese produced pictures. Pictures full of action, particularly those dealing with spectacular military events, and socalled "freak pictures" making a direct appeal to the imagination, find the widest market.

Downey Ties Zane Grey To "West of Pecos" Date

The fishing camp of Bermagui, south of Sydney, Australia, is a favorite of author Zane Grey and also part of the circuit supervised by L. A. Downey. So when the famed author made camp there to get some swordfish, Downey arranged for a special screening at King's Hall of "West of the Pecos," one of the Grey stories.

Part of the proceeds were donated to the local life saving club with Grey making the presentation during the program. The event broke in the Sydney papers.

Cooper Poses With "Deeds" Newspaper Ad

With "Mr. Deeds" running for seven consecutive weeks at the Liberty Theatre, Seattle, Leroy Johnson, general manager of the Jensen and von Herberg Theatres dispatched a copy of the newspaper carrying the ad to Hollywood and had special still posed with Gary Cooper looking it over (see photo). Still was prominently displayed in lobby and broke newspapers with story.

advance story of each theatre's coming picture the day before the opening date. In recognition of this liberality, each theatre, including most of the suburbans, advertises in the daily papers heavily each Sunday, and liberally during the week-days. Personal opinion of the writer is that the newspapers are more valuable in getting the attention of the Atlanta patrons than probably any other kind of publicity year in and year out. Ballyhoos with noisemakers on the streets are forbidden by city ordinance, hence ballyhoos have to be unusual and outstanding to attract any attention on the streets, except in the residential sections.

There is very little except spasmodic opposition for theatres here to contend with, except baseball in summer, when the Atlanta team plays two night games each week, resulting in from 8,000 to 12,000 fans attending. This is a distinct opposition for those nights, but many of the theatre managers are of the opinion that baseball fans attending these night games attend the theatres either on other than baseball nights or in the daytime. However, baseball is practically the only serious opposition to the theatres. There are no dog tracks, race horse tracks or other distractions existent in Atlanta to the extent of being serious opposition, but, like other large cities of like nature, it has its wrestling matches, its amateur baseball games, basketball games, softball games, etc., and these prove an opposition, but only such opposition as is contended with legitimately in other healthy American communities of large size.

Good Show Town for Good Shows

To summarize, Atlanta is a good show town. However, it is not a particularly outstanding show town. Good pictures will do good business; outstanding pictures will do outstanding business. It is conservative in that it will not go out to see just anything, but will crowd into theatres showing definitely outstanding pictures. One of the theatres—the Capitol—has a dual policy, offering stage show in connection with pictures, but does no more than average business week in and week out. It would not be true to say that Atlanta is not a good show town for all types of stage entertainment, for a show headed by Katherine Cornell here a year or more ago at the legitimate theatre (which opens only spasmodically) did turnaway business for four performances, as did Walter Huston in "Dodsworth" recently, but an average stock company folded up here late last summer after four weeks.

Atlanta is a good show town for good shows. And Atlanta's theatre patrons have an uncanny way of detecting good shows. And bad ones, too. Ask Atlanta managers.

Rutherford Personal

The personal appearance of Ann Rutherford garnered plenty of publicity for the world premiere of "The Harvester" at the Broadway, Portland, Ore. Broadcast was held in front of theatre with Mayor Carson making formal presentation to Miss Rutherford of Parent's Magazine Award given the picture.

Sea Scouts Aid Cooper On "Follow the Fleet"

Few weeks ahead of his showing of "Follow the Fleet" at the Cove in Glen Cove, L. I., Max Cooper promoted miniature battleship built by sea scouts for display on marquee (see photo). Scouts acted as ushers and were planted at the four corners leading to theatre semaphoring to each other. Bugler on roof sounded assembly, which was the cue for the scouts to send messages "follow the fleet to the Cove Theatre." To first ten persons bringing the message to the lobby, tickets were awarded.

In conjunction with this contest, the semaphore alphabet appeared in local newspaper and contestants advised to study it.

Contests Highlights Friedman's "Modern Times" Campaign

A contest was planted in local daily by Mannie Friedman, Fantasy Theatre, Rockville Center, L. I., on "Modern Times" for which passes were awarded those submitting the best list of 25 most valuable contributions to modern times. Another contest was staged in local Theatre and Merchants News with tickets to contestants submitting best limericks pertaining to any of the merchants' advertising in the paper and tickets to those finding most misspelled words.

Imprinted derby hat blotters were distributed at all schools, as were "he's back again" heralds. Ushers dressed as Chaplin with back banners covered streets two weeks ahead, co-op ad page was secured and human interest story on crippled kids attending showing was run in Brooklyn Eagle.

Radio Campaign Sells "Things to Come"

A radio campaign of no small proportions highlighted Ray Bell's "Things to Come" date at Loew's Palace, Washington, D. C. Well known announcer conducted six day contest, asking listeners whether they would rather live in 2036 or 1936. Reviewers discussed film over every local station, Station WJSV ran two fifteen minute programs dedicated to the picture and Albert Benham, representing League Against War, discussed film over radio.

Postcards endorsing film were mailed from New York to selected list, classified ad contest planted in paper and cooperating auto dealer took half page co-op ad tying copy into picture. Newspapers were generous in breaks of preview attended by many notables, and also praised the picture editorially.

Hairdressers Association Aids Harman on "Desire" Date

The Hairdressers Association of St. Louis tied in with Homer Harman at the Orpheum for his "Desire" date. Invitations were mailed to all beauty shops for a special advance preview. In addition to Homer contacting the shops, association followed through with postcards, received day ahead of opening.

Four girls in costume covered main streets (see photo) distributing roses with imprinted cards attached, and candy kisses pasted to hearts with cut of Cooper and Dietrich. Men's shops featured window display of latest in toggery with large portrait of Cooper flanked with stills and automobile agency came in with co-op ad, copy reading, "satisfy your Desire for something better, buy a," etc., etc.

Unusual Window Display Used for "Pasteur"

An attractive window display was promoted from leading department store in East Liberty, Pa., by George Bronson, Warner's Sheridan Square for "Pasteur" (see photo). Tying in the angle that one of the greatest contributions to society made by Louis Pasteur was discovery of cure for the silk worm plague, window featured setpiece of eight stills depicting silk culture in China with prominent picture and playdate mention.

Window cards were placed in choice locations, milk bottle hangers delivered to consumers and stencilled streamers used for dairy delivery trucks. Dairy also used huge bannered tank trucks for hauling raw milk to be pasteurized. Hospitals and schools were circularized and managers of large chain grocery made fifteen minute interval announcements over their p.a. systems.

Imprinted paper bags and menus were planted, one sheet with stills and date snipes were pasted on floor of lobby and druggist featured window display with President Roosevelt endorsement of picture.

Unusual Ad Contest Used By Lavoy for "Pasteur"

An excellent promotion tieup, entire cost of which was written off by cooperating milk company, was secured by Gene Lavoy, Dakota Theatre, Grand Forks, N. D., for "Pasteur." Dairy carried large ads with cut of Muni on a contest for which tickets were awarded winners.

Merchant's slogan, "Pasteurized Milk Is Safe," was carried in ad and contestants were instructed to take the first four letters of each word in the sentence—"P-M-I-S" and with those letters construct sentences using only four words, such as "Pasteur Made Innoculation Safe." It is reported the stunt was very successful.

Mother's Day Contest Tied In to "Show Boat"

With Mother's Day coming during his date on "Show Boat," W. W. Risley, RKO Palace, Rochester, N. Y., planted most popular mother contest in the Times Union, paper presenting winner with engraved certificate and Risley contributing corsage and guest tickets.

Through cooperation of coffee manufacturer, booth was set up in lobby at which coffee and doughnuts were served (see photo). Window strips were planted in leading stores, bookcovers and bookmarks given at lending libraries and "Show Boat" booklets placed in hotels and restaurants.

Caldwell in Favor Of Joffee's Method

Although the most has been said, pro or con, on Barney Joffee's pass giveaway wherein folks who had not attended the Tower Theatre, Kansas City, for the past six months were invited to see a show "on the house," the following from Manager J. Glenn Caldwell, Princess, Aurora, Mo., is of interest in that Caldwell adapts the Joffee idea in securing attention from folks in neighboring towns. Here is his letter:

"Knowing that the difference in situations demand different ideas and treatments, I seldom enter into trade discussions, but something happened this week that causes me to throw my lot with Mr. Joffee of Kansas City and his "pass" stunt.

Personally I don't believe in having a lot of annual passes, but Mr. Joffee's idea was not of that variety. He wanted to get into his Tower the folks who had never attended and the way he worked it, he no doubt accomplished his aim.

Now, we have a small town 40 miles from Springfield, Mo., with several small towns in between. We advertise extensively and I had thought every show-going person had at least been in our theatre once.

One of the newspapers in which we carry an ad, twelve miles away, the editor had never attended our theatre. He just didn't attend shows, unless he was out of town or went to Springfield. I sent him a pass for his family to see a show—he came—and in the next week's issue of his paper he carried in his column a nice boost for our theatre, saying he did not know our theatre was so nicely equipped, sound so good, etc., and he did not see why folks would drive 24 miles to Springfield for shows when our theatre offered everything the Springfield houses did, and ours was twelve miles nearer.

It looks like we were not doing our job in not selling this gentleman before now, but I'll wager there are a lot of people in every locality that don't know the type of theatre in the nearby town, and if a pass will get them into your theatre for the first time, boy, I sure believe in dishing it out.

In fact I intend using Joffee's idea in all the surrounding towns that do not have a theatre. I did use the idea locally a few years ago to those that had never heard a "talkie" and I know it made us money.

You have to get them in once to bring them back."—J. Glenn Caldwell.

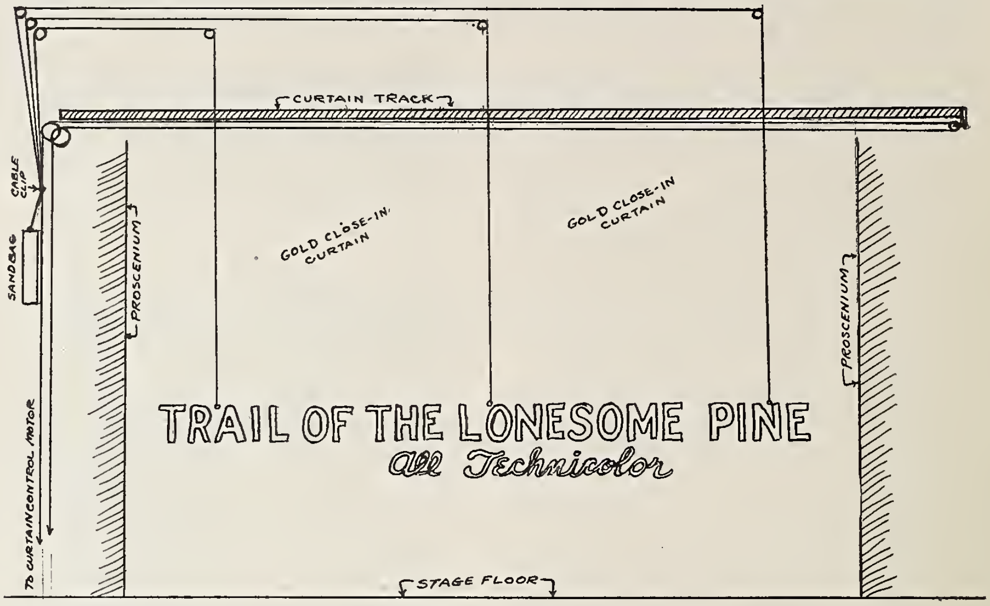
SMART MECHANICAL HOOKUP



Above is illustrated working plan of sign stunt used on stage by Walter Munn, publicist, Braumart Theatre, Iron Mountain, Mich. Letters are 18 inch cutout compo, each in different color, with "technicolor" line in silver flitter. Sign hangs foot in front of curtain, letters mounted on one by two battens painted same color as close-in curtains. By rigging set as shown, sign is automatically flown when curtains open and returns to position when curtains close.

Sign weighed 50 pounds and Munn says if counterweighting is done carefully heavier weights can be flown by curtain control motor. Sign was lighted by color foots plus two 1000-watt spots in wings, spots hooked into dimmer bank so that entire operation was handled from the booth.

Complete Campaign Staged By Garvin for "Red Rider"

R. B. Garvin, Art Theatre, Toronto, Kansas, put on a complete campaign for his Buck Jones serial. Organizing a Red Rider Club, Garvin had membership cards printed and ran a special preview of the first episode free to all kids. At this preview, membership cards were distributed entitling children to a five-cent admission every Saturday afternoon, cards punched each week.

Before the start of the first episode Garvin staged a cowboy and cowgirl parade and for the best costume boy was given a Buck Jones Daisy air rifle and winning girl a suede zipper jacket.

Gas Station Ties In With Chakeres on "Deeds"

For "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town" M. H. Chakeres, Regent Theatre, Springfield, Ohio, tied up largest gas station there, who used a man in tux dressed as Mr. Deeds, greasing and refilling cars. Company also carried large newspaper ad with streamer offering ducats to "lucky" cars coming to the station.

Blotters with cut of Cooper and Arthur were distributed in offices, hotels, etc., and motor company cooperated, tying in with title "See our new car and Mr. Deeds." Car was parked in front of theatre during engagement.

Guess Weight And Be Ducated

Out in Hollywood, Howard Ralston, Warner's Ritz Theatre for "Boulder Dam" planted a huge rock offering guest tickets to those correctly guessing weight.

On "Road Gang," Howard piled rocks with large pick at entrance, card reading "the pick of Warner's pictures." Also spotted around town were compo board question marks with copy reading "are such things possible? See," etc., etc.

CARY A. REEVES
is the assistant manager and treasurer of the Hippodrome in Cleveland where our good friends Ed Miller and Mort Goodman keep us posted. Now we have the theatre tied up about 100%. Cary tells us he has worked for some very good Round Tablers including Sig Solomon, Bob Weitman, Frank Cost and Al Beckerich. Reeves served his apprenticeship as student manager at the Brooklyn Paramount and worked on the service staff of the Brooklyn Albee and New York Hippodrome.

J. K. KERR
is right here in New York City managing the Alpine Theatre, an uptown neighborhood house. Well, Kerr, there's nothing to keep you from dropping in on us next day you have off and getting personally acquainted. Remember the welcome mat is out and we're always glad to see our friends.

in Elko, Nevada, manages the Hunter Theatre and says he started in showbusiness as usher at the Paramount in Salt Lake City, serving as head usher and then doorman at the Capitol. From there, John went to the Paramount Film Exchange and then to Universal as Accessory manager, the latter position he held until assuming his present job.

is down in Granger, Texas, managing the Tab Theatre which he owns. Irv says he started as a musician in New York and was always interested in showbusiness. Started doing everything around a theatre and then became a manager. After a shot at that Lambert decided to acquire a house of his own and we now find him operating the Tab.

manages the Strand Theatre out in Minto, N. D., and since he is the first member we have had join up from that city, the responsibility of keeping us posted rests entirely on your broad shoulders, Harold. You've got a moral obligation to the Club anyway, so keep in touch with us.

out in Chicago manages the Avaloe Theatre. Oscar started in peddling programs, became supervisor of all program distribution, usher, chief of service, aiding in publicity, then publicity director, assistant manager and then managing director in his present job.

formerly connected with the Randforce Circuit in Brooklyn is now managing the Broadway Theatre in Woodcliff, N. J. Unless we're very much mistaken, Carl, when you came into the office to join up you promised to keep us posted on what's what out your way. Well, we're still waiting. What do you say?

This poster head of Kay Francis was created by J. Forrest Qualls, artist at the Rialto, Denver. It was done in pastel on velour and measured three by four feet. Colors ran from light blue highlights into deep shades of purple and blues on the right side of the face, the left side done in vivid flesh tones with cream highlight.

“The drama of a great ideal, the drama of a great woman, this picture is fine entertainment for any kind of audience! Though entirely different in theme motivation from ‘Pasteur’, there is a direct entertainment parallel. A 100 per cent woman’s picture—likewise an attraction worthy of the attention of every man, youth or adult who is interested in the cause of improved screen entertainment. It’s the kind of show that exhibitors can take to the opinion-creating forces in any community and demand that it be brought to the attention of all”!—Motion Picture Herald

THE LAW and GREEN PASTURES

BECAUSE the letter but not the spirit of law is at issue, that extraordinary and most orthodoxly acceptable production, "The Green Pastures," in its motion picture version is in a temporarily difficult position with the British censorship. Also an unhappy consequence is that the difficulty tends to extend itself in other parts of the empire.

There is, most broadly speaking, no proper exception to be taken to the purpose of the law involved in the matter. It is in substance a prohibition against the portrayal of any representation of God or Christ. The intent obviously enough has been protection of the feelings of the devout, protection against blasphemies, against invasions of taste.

However, like many another blanket prohibition, it can not always apply in justice. "The Green Pastures," by the genius of its concepts and execution, contrives to serve precisely the same human and social and religious interests as the law which is now being read against it.

It is to be hoped, and anticipated, that the spirit and not the letter will ultimately prevail in the final decisions of the authorities.

SUCCESS IN ACADIA

IT IS A JUNE afternoon for loitering thoughts in our rose tinted cubicle atop our high tower where the roar of midtown Manhattan comes out of the busy traffic of the canyons like the distant thunders of a cataract.

Down there along the streets is a city world mad with haste and things to do.

But we've been away for a spell—just in fancy, day-dreaming through a happy little movie success story encountered months ago on a journey into the Evangeline country of Louisiana, where live oaks pendent with Spanish moss stand over the lazy waters of the bayous inviting one to engage in doing a vast deal of nothing.

It is Lafayette Parish, and the seat and capital, a very French little city, also bears the same honored name. Eighty-odd per cent of the people are French speaking 'Cajuns and in the back country many of them have no other language until circumstance brings them to town.

The smallest motion picture theatre of Lafayette is the Royal, a nickelodeon type house, substantially unchanged since the day that it was built many and many a year ago. And the conspicuous motion picture success of the region is Mr. Paul Blanchet, owner of the Royal, with its three hundred and fifty hard seats. Around the corner and down the street is the competition, The Jefferson, circuit house, de luxe, imposing and capably managed by L. D. Guidry, for the Southern Amusement Company, circuit, of Lake Charles. But competition is friendly in Lafayette. A policy is a policy there. Mr. Blanchet's policy is to do nothing about The Royal but to run it, indefinitely, and probably forever, undecorated, unimproved, a little theatre very much of the people who want their world as it is.

Paul Blanchet came out of the mossy back country a little boy. He became bootblack, errand boy, newsboy, bartender. He made friends, studied success. He went to war, came home and became in time a bank clerk. He learned about money, too. Then he bought the nickelodeon. He operated it in person. He made more friends. He made it pay. He bought real estate, country acreage, invested here and there, prospered, became a power, a political influence. When one does anything in Lafayette one sees Mr. Paul Blanchet about it first. He arranges matters.

Paul Blanchet's interests have long outgrown the fusty little Royal, but he keeps it, a community institution and center, very like in function to some country newspapers. A brother-in-law is the manager, Mrs. Blanchet and a sister take turns at the little box office. Many of the customers of the remarkably steady patronage of today are grown-ups who got their first taste of the movies on passes that Paul Blanchet gave them when they were wistful kids in the street. He is still making customers for the years to come the same way.

When the religious little community of Lafayette needs a theatre gathering place it always finds the Royal available, M. Blanchet obliging. The Royal is their place, homely, unpretentious, close to the ground. They do not have to dress up to go to the Royal.

It was the strength that he built shaking hands and nodding welcomes at the Royal that gave M. Blanchet the victory a couple or so years ago when he had a difference with the Huey Long machine of Louisiana. No matter what the issue was, the vote was for what M. Blanchet was for.

So down there in the 'Cajun country is one of the motion picture's real successes, in the Royal and Mr. Blanchet—typical of a few thousand others, not looming large "on the big time," but big in Hometown, the best town in America.

This Week

Epitaph

Congress finally adjourned this week, and with adjournment came death to a score of bills that would have considerably affected the present structure of the motion picture, especially in its relations between exhibitors and distributors. These would have been altered by the proposal to outlaw compulsory block booking, among other practices.

Adjournment, too, brought "suggestions" from the Securities and Exchange Commission for legislation correcting trusteeship operations, bankruptcies and reorganizations, the SEC citing film cases as examples of the exploitation of security holders.

The Congressional situation is reviewed on page 13.

Spellbinders

Fears of exhibitors that political ballyhoo this year would prove dangerous competition are justified in the declarations of both major parties that tentative plans call for extensive use of radio and the screen during the campaign. Elaborate shows are to be staged on the air waves, and sound trucks carrying short subjects and filmed speeches are expected to add to the hullabaloo.

The outlook for the political wars from the exhibitors' viewpoint is analyzed on page 18.

Pullman Problems

Adding to the comfort of passengers on long train rides, film shows are now a regular nightly feature on five Chicago, Burlington and Quincy crack trains between Chicago and Omaha and Denver. While physically adequate, the innovation presents other problems.

For particulars, see page 34.

Actors' Income Tax

Actors who accept engagements abroad are often puzzled as to how the Government of the United States will levy on their income. Actors' Equity Association, at the behest of British Actors' Equity, asked the treasury department for a ruling, and got it.

Klaw's Passion

Marc Klaw's death brings anecdotes of his little known career in the motion picture, a career that started when he made a motion picture on the Passion of Christ and attempted to fight off competitive efforts on the grounds that he had the exclusive rights to film the Passion!

See page 55.

Stage and Vaudeville

Admittedly on the way out, although there are some dissenters, vaudeville, which sank low last season, will find scarcely any place in motion picture theatres this summer, and indications for the fall are not heartening to those who are fighting to "save vaudeville."

A survey of the situation in the season just ended, with a preview of the future of vaudeville, is given on page 15.

Restoration of the legitimate theatre to its former effulgence is the aim of a campaign planned by Actors Equity Association, in unison with the producers, playwrights and other stage interests. William A. Brady fathered the idea.

What it is all about, and other developments in the field of actors and the drama, are related on page 15.

William Fox's Quandary

One of the surprises of many a year in the federal bankruptcy courts of many surprises came this week when William Fox, trying to explain a voluntary bankruptcy petition, claimed his "millions and millions and millions of dollars" are gone, and now he must borrow $100 here and $100 there with which to pay the lawyers who defend him in the many litigations that involve him.

Mr. Fox's testimony and the causes leading up to the bankruptcy, as brought out in the courtroom in New Jersey, appear on page 29.

Hollywood Party

To the British Hollywood party organized by Arthur Taylor, secretary of the London and Home Counties branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association, have been invited exhibitors of France, Belgium, Sweden and Spain. Coming over on the Queen Mary and returning on the Normandie, the showmen will visit Chicago, San Francisco, Buffalo and Toronto in addition to Los Angeles and New York.

Details of the tour are published on page 59.

Educational

Three hundred delegates interested in the screen as an educational medium attended the national convention of the Visual Education Society, sponsored by the DeVry Foundation, at the Frances Parker School in Chicago last week.

Bill Crouch's story of the week in Chicago appears on page 78.

58 from Columbia

Fifty-eight features for the 1936-37 season were announced by Columbia executives at the company's annual sales convention at the Drake Hotel in Chicago this week. The company will establish a new exploitation service in each exchange area this year.

Details on pages 55-56.

Production Pickup

Production activity continued on the increase last week with twelve new pictures going into work and seven completed. Another was returned for retakes. Radio and Paramount started two pictures each, the remaining eight representing as many studios.

Titles, casts and directors of pictures completed and started are noted by Gus McCarthy on page 49.

Time Table

There will be no double featuring in Hungary after August 20th when new governmental regulations go into effect supplanting rules found ineffective in stimulation of local production. Further, exhibitors will know just how long their performances will run, when to start them and when to stop, because the government has arranged that for them, too. Exhibitors expect bankruptcy and American distributors' agents hold an opposite view.

Details of the new governmental rules and regulations are published on page 53.

Overseas Opinion

Murray Silverstone, chairman of British United Artists, told Hollywood listeners last week that American pictures are in no danger of being eclipsed in popularity in England by the increasingly formidable product of British studios. "No satiation point" is an especially eloquent phrase employed by the visitor in the course of his remarks.

Mr. Silverstone's views are reported in full on page 49.

Griffis Named

Stanton Griffis, of Hemphill, Noyes, brokerage house, was named chairman of the executive committee of Paramount at a meeting of the board of directors on Wednesday. Mr. Griffis answered the question of stockholders, on behalf of the board, at their annual meeting last week.

Leave of Absence

Broadway this week had Laurence Stallings, editor of Fox Movietone News, joining RKO, Metro and whatnot, whereas Mr. Stallings, under "a mutual and perfectly amicable arrangement," is merely taking a leave of absence for the summer in order to retire to his summer place in the south to concentrate on his literary ambitions, principally on a new play.

RKO's home office reputedly said privately that a deal is on with Mr. Stallings, and to this, Truman Talley, Fox Movietone chief, explained that there is nothing in Mr. Stalling's contract preventing him from doing feature motion picture work. He pointed out that Mr. Stallings worked on "So Red the Rose" last winter, for Paramount.

Mr. Talley declared flatly that Mr. Stallings is not resigning his newsreel position and that his editorial title will continue on the reel.

Restriction

Out of 51 film importers applying to the Czechoslovakian Film Advisory Board and Ministry of Commerce only 26 were registered. Seven others will receive occasional permits, 5 must wait for further deliberations over their applications and 13 have been denied.

Harry Knopf's survey of trade conditions i nCzechoslavakia appears on page 68.

More Quotas

Encouraged by a sustained upswing in domestic production activities, film producers in the Argentine have placed before the Senate proposals for legislation favorable to further development of local production. The quota law, of familiar pattern, would reduce importation drastically.

Natalio Bruski's story of the movement, with details of the producers' proposals, is published on page 28.

"Frozen Money"

Inability of the solvent Spanish government to provide American dollars for exchange has resulted in a condition threatening to stifle the industry in Spain. Many major accounts are 15 months in arrears. A consortium is being urged as a method of meeting the situation.

The Spanish situation is summed up on page 44.

Divot Makers

Leading lights of the film industry showed their golfing skill or lack of it at the 24th Film Daily tournament held at Glen Oaks on Wednesday. The day included a farm breakfast, lunch, dinner, an evening of fun and even some golf.

The story of the tournament and the list of prize-winners are given on page 48.

Show Boat

The Hudson River show boat Delaware became the first craft of its kind to show motion pictures when it made its initial cruise up the New York river this week. The ship has an outdoor theatre on the upper deck accommodating 850 and equipped by Western Electric for sound and silent films. Only short subjects will be shown at first with features to be added later.

Expansion

With 26 theatres already in operation or actual construction, and 12 more to be opened shortly, the Loew-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer interests are now found to be engaged in a worldwide upbuilding of outlets for the Metro product in places where such representation has heretofore been unobtainable.

The movement is traced over the four corners of the globe, on page 32.

Remedy

Aiming at correction of a difficult theatre situation credited to a misguided real estate operation some years ago, MGM has offered Barcelona exhibitors a new policy hinging upon long runs of big pictures at high admission prices.

Harry Chapin Plummer's on-the-scene account of the development is printed on page 44.

Open Door

New regulations issued by the Chinese government open the door to foreign producers who may wish to make pictures in that country and enunciate slight restrictions likely to be modified favorably. Contrariwise, a dissociated pronunciamento requires exhibitors to devote sixty per cent of their screen time to Chinese productions, to which trade opinion replies that the aren't that many.

Complete text of the new regulations is published in the story on page 17.

Armistice

After sixteen days of a "stay in" strike which paralyzed the motion picture industry in France, closing many cinemas and preventing distribution of films, industry heads and union delegates agreed on June 18th to terms of a temporary pact worked out by the Minister of Labor, who acted as arbitrator in sessions extending over three days.

Pierre Autre's story of the strike is on page 40.

Television

Scophony, Ltd., has added to the mounting total of television information released in London the assertion that it is equipped to reproduce broadcasts in theatre-sized screen dimensions beginning in July. This is contrary to statements recently released by other television interests.

Personnel and background of Scophony, Ltd., is given on page 59.

This Week in Pictures

BEEFSTEAK FOR "U." Universal wound up its annual sales convention on June 17th with a beefsteak dinner at the New York Athletic Club attended by 240 members of the organization and guests. James R. Grainger, general sales manager, was presented with a scroll.

STUDIO VISIT. Antonio Moreno, en route from Spain to Hollywood, stopped off in England to visit the new Joe Rock studio in construction at Elstree. Mr. Rock is at Mr. Moreno's right, Georgia Harris, under contract to Mr. Rock, at his left.

HELD OVER. Desmond Tester, boy actor in GB's "Nine Days a Queen," has been signed to appear in "The Hidden Power."

GOES ACROSS. W. A. Bach, formerly president of Audio Productions, Inc., has been appointed managing director of Western Electric, Ltd., London, and sailed last week on the Bremen.

[COSMO-SILEO]

COMES ACROSS. Max Milder, managing director of Warner Brothers Pictures, Ltd., was among the passengers arriving on the Queen Mary on her second westward crossing.

CONVENTION END. RKO-Radio closed its three-day sales convention on June 17th with a dinner and show at the Waldorf Astoria in New York attended by 500. A 45-minute production burlesquing industry routine was staged by The March of Time, directed by Ralph Rolan.

CONTRACTED: Claudette Colbert, signed by Paramount for seven pictures, will also make one this year for RKO.

GREETING. (L. to R.) Abraham Lehr, vice-president of Goldwyn productions, greets Mr. and Mrs. Murray Silverstone (chairman of British U.A.), Madame Ouspenskaya, Goldwyn star, and Peter Abbot, her manager, on their arrival in Hollywood, where she will make her screen debut.

INTRODUCTIONS. Doris Dudley, who will play a featured role in "Portrait of a Rebel," Katherine Hepburn feature for RKO-Radio, meets Leo Spitz (left), president of RKO Pictures, and Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation, at the organization's sales convention.

AWOL. Bette Davis and Joan Blondell took advantage of a lull in production of their First National pictures to enjoy a beach respite. Miss Davis is at work on "Mountain Justice" and Miss Blondell is playing the principal role in "Stage Struck."

MARRIED. Mollie Cardew, actress, and Theodore Lageard, publicity head of Toeplitz Prod., Ltd., London, were attended by M. D. Ludovico Toeplitz, right. The marriage took place at St. Mary Abbot's, Kensington.

HEAVY DUTY. Wearing a 60-pound dress, made of crystal and silver bugles, Carole Lombard is co-starred with William Powell in "My Man Godfrey," Universal feature production of the Eric Hatch novel, produced and directed by Gregory LaCava.

ANNOUNCES CONVENTION. Sydney S. Horen, general manager, and the administrative staff of Hispano-Fox Film were photographed in the course of a supper round table conference at the Taberna "La Cala" in Barcelona, preceding announcement of a company convention to be held at the Palace Hotel in Madrid, July 24-26, with delegates present from all territories served by the Spanish distribution unit.

FILM REORGANIZATIONS REPORTED TO CONGRESS

Adjournment of 74th Congress Brings Death to a Score of Film Bills and Requests for Reforms in All Trusteeships

Neely Report Charges Present Block Booking System Is Injurious Both to Public and Independent Theatre Owners

The 74th Congress of the United States adjourned at 12:39 on Tuesday morning, leaving Senator Rush D. Holt, Democrat, of West Virginia, droning a filibuster from "Aesop's Fables," and, of more importance to the motion picture, leaving unenacted a score of bills dealing with the film business. All became at once merely incidents of Capitol Hill history.

There was left, too, for the consideration of the 75th Congress when it convenes on Tuesday morning, January 5th, some rather tersely-worded proposals that legislation be enacted to protect security holders from being exploited in reorganizations, bankruptcies, trusteeships and the like. Film cases were cited, particularly that of Paramount, as being typical of those requiring correction and protection through legislation.

Both the Sabath and the Securities and Exchange committees reported to Congress on adjournment concerning the matters of trusteeships and reorganizations.

This session was marked by what was freely admitted to be the bitterest battle in history over a single piece of motion picture legislation: the Neely Pettengill proposal to outlaw socalled "compulsory" block booking and blind selling. Arranged as proponents on the one side were Allied States Association and minority exhibition interests; and on the other, in opposition, were the large interests, as represented by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Charles Clyde Pettijohn being their spokesman. Both sides, however, enlisted the oratorical aid of considerable outside interests from the fields of women's organizations, and elsewhere.

No Enthusiasm from Floor

Nearest to enactment of all the motion picture legislation, the block booking bill was favorably reported by the Interstate Commerce Committee, on June 15th, and was on the Senate calendar at adjournment. Had there been any possibility of obtaining the support of the rules committee, it is probable the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would have made a similar report.

The bill was strongly pressed during the session and was the subject of hearings by both Senate and House committees and, with a favorable report of the Senate, advanced further than it has done in any past session. Enthusiasm for its consideration on the floor was lacking, however, and once reported it was permitted to languish on the calendar.

Committee Charges Oppression

In its report, just released, the Neely Senate committee charged that "not only are the practices of compulsory block booking and blind selling injurious to the public in forcing the showing of obscene or vicious pictures and in preventing the showing of many that are desirable, but they unfairly burden and oppress the independent exhibitors. In no other industry, so far as the committee is aware, are all the risks of the manufacturer or producer passed on to the retailer and consumer. The exhibitor, in order to get any films, is obliged to contract to accept and pay for all that the producer sees fit to release during the contract period. He cannot cultivate the good will and suit the preferences of his patrons by selecting the pictures best calculated to please them. Subject to only minor exceptions, the rule is 'all or none.'"

SCREEN THEIR GOAL, POETS ARE ADVISED

Writing screen scenarios was indicated this week as the next goal of the poet, at the first daily session of the American Congress of Poets at the Barbizon-Plaza Hotel, in New York.

Pointing out that T. S. Eliot's "Murder in the Cathedral," which was produced by the Federal Theatre project of the Works Progress Administration last season, was really a poetic work, Dr. Robert MacDonald, president of the Robert Burns Circle of New York, predicted a revival of the poetic drama on the stage and screen.

"I live for the day when I will see poetry in pictures," Dr. MacDonald told the 25 in attendance. "Poetry will give a new form, a new content, a new expression to the cinema."

The introduction of the poet's philosophy to motion pictures might have a salutary effect on college and high school students, he suggested. "We're living in the day of the necker. Were the screen poetic, it could teach these young men and women of the real nobility and sweetness and beauty of love."

The worst feature of the practice is that it preempts the playing time of the exhibitor and discourages independent producers from entering the field, it was held by Senator Neely's committee.

"There appears to be no sound reason for apprehending that the enactment on the bill will inflict appreciable monetary loss on the motion picture industry," the committee said in defense of the legislation. "The measure will effect no shrinkage in the playing time on the screens, there will still be the same number of theatres operating the same number of days a week and the same number of hours a day. And this playing time will have to be occupied by the product of the existing producing and distributing organizations, at least until competition has sprung up under the conditions of free and open competition which will prevail.

"The only change will be that exhibitors will have the opportunity to make up for the poor pictures which they do not purchase by obtaining good pictures not hitherto available to them. To illustrate, if the bill is passed, an exhibitor who heretofore bought the full blocks of Paramount-Metro-Fox will be free to buy only half of the pictures included in those blocks, and he will be enabled to purchase half of the blocks of RKO, Warner and Universal.

"In brief, the bill, if enacted, will result in giving additional playdates and extended running time to the good pictures at the expense of the bad, and the public will gain not only from the vital standpoint of selectivity but because of the added incentive on the part of all producers to make better pictures due to the restoration of competitive conditions.

"If the producers refrain from showing their poorer pictures in their affiliated theatres, the independent exhibitors should not be compelled to buy them as a condition precedent to obtaining other pictures which they and their patrons desire."

Calls "Reformation" Feeble

The committee expressed confidence that the bill "will meet a need for regulation that is constantly growing more acute due to the rapidly increasing influence of the movies on the morals, habits, manners and culture of the country. The regulation provides establishment of community freedom on the subject, conforms with the essential principles of our American form of government.

"The contention that the movies have improved in quality during the past two years is irrelevant since the public is entitled to choose even as between good pictures," it commented. "But the recent feeble reformation is purely voluntary, and there is no assurance that even present imperfect standards will be maintained if this legislation is not passed. Experience teaches that, as a rule, such reforms are sporadic, induced by outbursts of public indignation, and that they are of short duration."

The Neely report paid special attention to the provisions of Section 4, requiring a synopsis, pointing out that this was the main point of attack by the producer-distributors and explaining that "it is obvious that this provision must be retained if the bill is to accomplish its purpose to establish community freedom in the matter of motion picture entertainment. The right of selection conferred by Section 3 would be a farce without the provisions for supplying the information on which the selection would necessarily be based."

All told, the Neely committee contended, "the bill is in effect as much a relinquishment as an exertion of the power of Congress over interstate commerce in that it enables communities' freedom of selection of motion picture films shipped in interstate commerce in much the same way that Congress from time to time has yielded to the states local option in respect to intoxicating liquors shipped in a similar manner."

Copyright Bill Waits

Probably second in importance in this Congressional session was the copyright legislation. The Duffy bill was passed by the Senate last August. The copyright treaty also was ratified by the Senate, but that ratification was set aside until the House of Representatives had acted on the legislation necessary to make the international convention effective.

The House patents committee held lengthy hearings on the subject, to the Duffy bill being added measures written by Chairman Sirovich and Representative Daly of Pennsylvania. The same conflict of opinion between members that made enactment of the legislation impossible in 1935 was evidenced throughout the hearings and the following committee meetings and the measure died in committee.

Partial success marked the Dickstein bill to restrict the immigration of alien actors. After a number of hearings, the immigration committee approved the bill and it was adopted by the House. It was so late in the session, however, that the Senate found no time to take action.

The purpose of the bill is to afford protection for American professional talent. The approval of the House Immigration Committee was given the measure on the ground that European countries impose restrictions on the appearances of American artists. In some countries, it was stated, they are completely barred.

By the provisions of the bill, the approval of the Secretary of Labor would have to be secured before any alien actor, singer, solo dancer, instrumentalist or orchestra conductor could enter the United States, but provision was made for a reciprocal exchange of artists with foreign countries which permit the performances of Americans within their borders.

SEC's Trusteeship Report

Financial operations of Paramount as disclosed by the investigation of that company last winter were cited as an example of the methods followed in the exploitation of security holders which should be prohibited, in the report on the activities of trustees under indentures as submitted to Congress by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The report was one of a series which is being prepared by the commission, and in later instalments it is anticipated the activities of protective committees in the Paramount case will be dealt with more fully.

The SEC recommended the adoption of a code of law to deal with all phases of the corporation reorganization problem, and specifically suggested that Congress prohibit service as trustees by persons having or acquiring "conflicts of interest" incompatible or inconsistent with their fiduciary obligations.

The Paramount case was related by the commission in its report as exemplifying the need for care on the part of trustees over indenture provisions and their performance to safeguard the interests of investors. Primarily, it was an example of "negative" pledge clauses "and the notorious history of their circumvention."

"An example of the illusory nature of the protection which these clauses afford," the report explained, "is provided by an incident from the history of Paramount-Publix Corporation developed at a hearing before this commission.

"In 1932, this company was obligated on $25,000,000 of debentures which were widely held by the public. These contained a familiar negative pledge clause: 'that so long as the debentures shall be outstanding the corporation will not create, or permit the creation of, any mortgage or other lien upon any property or assets directly owned by the corporation without equally and ratably securing the (debentures) bonds thereunder.'

"Paramount had $9,600,000 in short-term unsecured notes outstanding in the spring of 1932, held by a number of banks, chiefly New York banks. It lacked cash sufficient to pay all these notes. One of these banks refused to renew the note it held, and it was feared that the others would follow suit. Furthermore, Paramount needed substantial new money in order to carry it (Paramount) through the summer, for even in normal years production costs were heaviest during the summer when income was lowest, and it had been customary in past years for Paramount to borrow money at this season. According to Sir William Wiseman, who testified at the hearing before this commission: 'Paramount had at that time about six to seven million dollars tied up in partly finished negatives and if they had not been able to finish them those negatives would have been worthless, completely worthless, and moreover they wouldn't have been able to finish their program for the fall. It would have meant bankruptcy.'

"Paramount had several meetings with its bank creditors as a result of which the decision was reached that the banks would extend the existing credits and (with other banks) would also provide approximately $4,275,000 of new credit, against which Paramount might draw to complete the films then in production and for its anticipated summer requirements, on condition that the banks obtained security both for the existing loans and the new credit.

Cites Transfer of Assets

"The latter meant that the debenture provisions would have to be either violated or avoided. The latter course did not prove to be impossible to Paramount's lawyers. Assets of the company directly owned were not pledged; they were transferred to a subsidiary created for the sole purpose of holding them; this subsidiary paid the parent for these assets by notes which the parent indorsed to the banks. The effect of this was to give the banks a claim on these assets prior to that of the debenture holders.

"The business (as contrasted to the ethical or legal) argument in favor of such transaction," the commission pointed out, "was that receivership was staved off; and that investment in films was salvaged. The validity of that business argument need not be determined here. Motivation for evasion or avoidance of such negative pledge clauses will always have varying degrees of propriety. But if issuers and their lawyers are left unrestrained in fixing the degree of protection afforded by the negative pledge clause, the use of such clause will become grossly deceptive."

The 45,000-word report of the SEC went deeply into the relationship of trustees to protective committees in the course of which it was charged that such committees "all too frequently have been identified with interests which are not identical with those of the security holders whom they represent," and pointed out that such relationships frequently operate to the detriment of the investor.

"It is idle to expect a committee composed of underwriters to require a receiver or bankruptcy trustee to sue the underwriters for their participation with the management in misappropriation or diversion of the corporation's assets and thus improve the position of bondholders," it was pointed out in the SEC's report.

Investigations of the select committee to investigate real estate bondholders' reorganizations saved the Paramount company and its investors hundreds of thousands of dollars, it was claimed by Representative Sabath, of Illinois, chairman of the committee, in the report submitted by the committee to the House of Representative as Congress adjourned.

Legislation which would restrict the opportunities for "mulcting" of the investing public by committees was recommended in the report, in which it was asserted that in the past five years more than $4,000,000,000 have been lost to creditors in bankruptcy and receivership matters.

The Paramount case was cited as a demonstration of the freedom from court control of bondholders' committees with respect to expenses and compensation and even where such approval is obtained, it was asserted, allowances granted are often exorbitant and beyond all reason, when considering bondholders' losses.

Paramount Hearings

"In the reorganization of the Paramount-Publix Corporation, of New York City, approximately $3,200,000 in fees and expenses had been requested in addition to some $400,000 previously allowed and paid," it was pointed out. "One law firm—Root, Clark, Buckner and Ballentyne, New York—had been allowed $250,000 and was claiming an additional $700,000. During public hearings in New York your committee, through its attorneys, many of whom have served gratuitously, delved into this matter in an effort to determine what services could be rendered by a group of men, their attorneys and associates, over a period of a few years, that would justify the exorbitant fees approximating $3,600,000.

"Considerable publicity was given to the activities and interest of your committee, and we feel it was due largely to our public review of the matter and our bringing it to the attention of the court that the fees and expenses requested were reduced by approximately 75 per cent."

The report also went into the theatre-property situation in showing the cost to bondholders' for "protection," citing a situation in St. Louis involving Straus issues on several motion picture theatres.

"Although one large moving picture manufacturer and distributor invested approximately $3,500,000 in these theatres and had offered a reorganization whereby his entire resources would be put up to guarantee a new bond issue, agreeing that no salaries would be paid to officers of the operating company, but that all net income would be used to pay off bondholders, the protective committee killed the plan," it was charged. "Instead, it organized an operating corporation within the bondholders' committee. Bondholders were given income bonds controlled for 15 years by a voting trust completely dominated by the protective committee."

"In the case of the Strand Realty Company, which owned the St. Francis theatre, Louis R. Lurie, a private operator, purchased certificates of deposit and bonds aggregating $800,000 in face value for $560,377, held a foreclosure sale, and bought the property and leased it to the Paramount Company for five years at $70,000 per year and for 94 years at $75,000 per year net to himself, free from all taxes and upkeep. This scheme should have been obvious to the protective committee, which should have foreclosed and operated the property for bondholders' profit," reported the Sabath committee.

Resumption of the public hearings on developments within Paramount will depend on the success of efforts next week to gather a majority of the Sabath Congressional Committee members in New York following the close of the Democratic convention in Philadelphia.

FILM HOUSES END "VAUDE;" STAGE FIGHTS FOR LIFE

Stage Shows Abandoned by Motion Picture Theatres After Tests, Sending Policy to Lowest Ebb in Years

Already sunk to a low estate, vaudeville will strike its lowest ebb this summer. and the indications for next fall do not point to a revival, according to a survey this week of circuit home offices and booking agents in New York.

The situation outside New York has been spotty, a checkup reveals. Vaudeville has been reinstated, tested and experimented with in a number of key cities and smaller localities, but there has been no definite trend anywhere of a return to stage shows. Major circuit officials say that the problem is twofold: (1) the lack of a sufficient number of personalities that are genuine draws in order to sustain a continued policy; (2) the prohibitive cost of stage shows in relation to the gross.

Vaudeville followed the descending star of the legitimate stage last year when it was dealt its severest blow in the withdrawal of stage shows from Loew's Capitol and the RKO Palace on Broadway. Today Loew's State and the independently operated Roxy are the only theatres the length of Broadway maintaining a combination policy, where not so many years ago there were 15 or more houses playing vaudeville-film shows.

Only outstanding "names" draw today, since they must compete with expertly produced films that are satisfying entertainment in themselves, without the need for added attractions, and they must play in opposition to stellar radio acts. Personalities have taken the place of material in vaudeville, and before there can be any revival on a broad scale, the thousands of run-of-the-mill actors seeking work must revitalize their routines, discard the old gags, and bring their stuff up to date, it is pointed out.

Trend to Film "Names"

With the dearth of available stage and radio talent for vaudeville shows, the trend in the last season was to motion picture "names." Those that made the rounds of the circuits reaped a harvest, with salaries for individuals ranging from $750 to $7,500 a week, plus, in some instances, a percentage above a certain gross.

The attitude of film studios to personal appearances of their featured players has changed, according to booking offices, as they thus gain an experience which can be obtained only by meeting an audience face to face. Also, the actors themselves are eager for such engagements, it is reported, as some have received more favorable contracts as a result of demonstrating their drawing power.

Personal Appearances

Among film figures making personal appearances in motion picture theatres in the season just ended were: Eddie Cantor, Wallace Beery, Ricardo Cortez, Paul Lukas, Regis Toomey, Jack Benny, Burns and Allen, Ben Lyons, Bebe Daniels, Patricia Ellis, Edgar Kennedy, Jackie Coogan, Betty Grable, Gene Autry, Joe Penner, Edward Arnold, Lupe Velez, Bill Robinson, Jane Withers, Bobby Breen, Buddy Doyle, Anita Page, Louise Dresser, Louise Beavers, Ralph Bellemy, Roger Pryor, Dolores del Rio, Joel McCrea, Douglas Montgomery, Nils Asther, Carl Brisson, Jackie Cooper, Pinky Tomlin, Gene Raymond, Helen Costello, Alice Brady, Luis Alberni, Fred Keating, Ivan Lebedeff, Marx Brothers, Florence Lake, Lila Lee, Russell Hopton, George Bancroft, "Our Gang" unit, the "Three Stooges" and the Hall Johnson Choir.

SUMMER THEATRE SEASON LAUNCHED

This week marked the opening of the summer theatre season in the rural communities, and by early next month most of them will be in operation, marking a Broadway holiday which lasts until September.

Last year there were 42 rural theatres, according to the records of the Actors' Equity Association, and this summer more than 100 have been scheduled, and most of them will open, all the way from Skowhegan, Maine, to Abingdon, Virginia, on the Atlantic seaboard, to Texas in the South and California in the West.

Despite the fight over contractual terms, there will be "picture money" backing a number of the plays in the "cowshed circuit," as tryouts preliminary to staging on Broadway and to test film possibilities.

For the first time, Equity is imposing stringent regulations governing salaries and living conditions for actors, in a movie to drive out the "shoe string" operators of summer stock companies who are considered unfair competition to establish producers who abide by the Equity conditions.

Double Bills Blamed

Double bills have weaned the small town and neighborhood exhibitor and his public away from vaudeville, according to circuit officials, who recalled that New England became the "cradle" of duals when theatre operators found three acts of vaudeville too expensive. The spread of the practice had much to do with sending stage shows to their limbo.

However, Broadway booking offices report that in recent months there has been a greater disposition on the part of exhib-

Equity and Broadway Aiming Campaign to Restore Legitimate Theatre, Especially the Road, to Former Effulgence

Restoration of the stage—and specifically "the road"—to its onetime glory will be sought by legitimate theatre interests next fall, if plans inaugurated by Actors Equity Association are carried through.

The actors' organization seeks an alliance with the producers, managers, playwrights and other groups to revive the "living drama," and while campaign plans have not been concretely formulated, Equity has written to the League of New York Theatres and the Dramatists Guild, suggesting conferences out of which a program would emerge. The league has promised to take the matter up with its board of governors.

The plans will simmer for a while, as Frank Gillmore, Equity president, is en route to Hollywood for conferences with the Screen Actors' Guild, Equity's West Coast affiliate, in a move to further strengthen the link between the two organizations and to assist the film group in its drive for recognition by the motion picture producers.

Before Mr. Gillmore returns to New York late in July he will have conferred with persons of importance in San Francisco, Chicago and other major cities, and on his return will sound the tocsin for concerted action in an effort to make the word "theatre" mean something outside of New York.

Follows Plea by Brady

Equity's decision to launch the campaign originated in a stirring plea made at its recent annual meeting by William A. Brady, veteran producer and formerly prominently identified with the motion picture industry.

Mr. Brady had just returned from Hollywood, and having found discord between the writers and actors and film producers in Hollywood, and the dramatists and producers in New York, begged for harmony.

He observed, he said, that the various components of the theatre "were split wide open," and he found this "on the eve of the revival of the theatre from the Atlantic to the Pacific."

"The theatre," continued Mr. Brady, "can make a comeback in the next 12 or 24 months such as never before has been witnessed in history, but it can be brought about only by conservative and cooperative efforts.

"As I have often said, Equity has been and may still be the great constructive organization of the theatre. But you can't construct anything when you are divided. You must get together, the people who run the theatres in New York, the people producing plays here, the people producing for the road. If you will do that and I claim to know as much about it as any man in the itors to experiment with stage shows for a week or two to determine whether their continuance would be justified, and that this is entirely decided by the response.

Admitting that vaudeville is on the way out, a major booking office said this week that exhibitors in the small towns would rather play stage attractions than a second feature, but that with the constant improvement in motion picture product they have found that their film shows do not need any bolstering. And where exhibitors formerly played a weak picture with the support of a stage show, they now shelve it, as a sufficient supply of quality product is available, according to this office, which also reported that exhibitors are averse to using vaudeville because they find it too expensive when playing percentage pictures.

"Fighting a Lost Cause"

Despite the "save vaudeville" campaign being waged by actors, musicians, stagehands and allied interests, a feeling of deep gloom pervades vaudeville circles, and they admit that they are fighting a lost cause. Talent agencies have become resigned to the fact, and they long ago turned to the lusher fields of motion pictures and radio broadcasting.

There are those, however, who believe that the success of the novel Major Bowes' amateur units in touring the country indicates a demand for stageshows and Major Edward Bowes is one of these. He is optimistic.

"I believe that the day is near when theatres will return to the policy of offering fine orchestras and stage shows, such as the Capitol theatre inaugurated and presented, until last year, from the day it opened, 16 years ago," he said.

"No Training School"

"Radio and films took from the popular-priced theatre its best stage and musical talent, and there has been no training school or proving ground for newcomers to fill their places. Formerly, small vaudeville circuits, burlesque, concert halls and even beer gardens were the 'schools' for talented amateurs.

"My experience with my Sunday night radio network programs led me to organize troupes of talented amateurs. Fourteen of these are now touring the theatres of America with great success, rebuilding confidence of theatre managers who bravely lost money every week with dying vaudeville, because of the dearth of new faces and talent. The public likes the new radio amateurs on the stage. Through them hundreds of theatres rehired their stage crews and musicians and re-established the policy of orchestras and stage shows with films. The movement is gaining strength every day. New 'schools' for amateurs are opening in the form of other radio programs, amateur programs in theatres and the like. This can only result in hearty public demand for music and stage entertainment to supplement the screen."

Major Bowes was responsible for starting a vogue which spread to hundreds of theatres throughout the country who organized their own amateur units and exploited them locally on the air.

Band Bookings Increase

Mills Artists, Inc., reported a slight increase in theatre bookings of outstanding bands. A band policy has been singularly successful at the Paramount on Broadway since the first of the year, after about a year of films only.

Loew's State and the Roxy are shining examples of the success of combination policies at popular prices. The State has not varied its policy since it opened almost 15 years ago as a second-run film house with vaudeville, and in recent weeks has been rolling up some large grosses. With the gradual closing of other major theatres to talent, a greater supply is now available for the State, which consequently can present a better type of stage show. The Roxy has built up a family clientele for its combination stage presentation and film show that has pulled the house out of a deep red.

To test the attraction of vaudeville, Loew's returned the policy to the Metropolitan in Brooklyn, N. Y., three weeks ago but found that while the "take" was larger it was not sufficient to justify the extra cost, and ended the experiment last week.

Fading in Chicago

Stage shows made some headway in Chicago last season, but is all but vanishing for the summer, with the decision of Balaban and Katz to reinstate double billing in the neighborhoods. However, the Palace in Chicago is one of two key theatres in the RKO circuit which will retain stage shows during the summer, the other being the Palace in Cleveland.

Vaudeville in Boston subsequent runs and neighborhood houses have been drawing crowds in many instances where the policy is spotted one night a week, but "big time" stage shows definitely are on the wane in this former haven for acts. The 4,332-seat Metropolitan, operated by Mullen and Pinanski-Paramount, and the 3,246-seat RKO Boston were the only first-runs booking vaudeville last winter. The Boston since has gone to double bills, leaving the Metropolitan the only first-run vaudeville house in town.

United Front Held Stage's Salvation

United States—you will find the road crazy for the spoken drama.

Sees Opportunity Wasted

"Imagine 'The Old Maid' playing to $2,700 in Sacramento. Imagine Walter Huston playing to $4,400 in Oklahoma. Imagine Helen Hayes playing to $40,000 in a week of one night stands in Ohio and Kentucky. Imagine Toledo turning out to the tune of $9,000 in a matinee and night for a good attraction.

"I am not only talking to you actors and actresses, here. I am talking to my brother producers. I am talking to my brother dramatists (because I have written two or three plays and two of them were great successes, if I may say so). I say to them all, every man jack of them, that they are missing the opportunity of half a century by scrapping among themselves and throwing mud at each other. That goes for all the theatre.

"I just want to ask one thing. I will ask it in the other Associations later on. For God's sake, men and women of the theatre, let's get together as other businesses do some time this summer and prepare to go in and win. Quit your fighting among yourselves. Equity has done pretty damn well for you in the last fifteen or eighteen years."

Gillmore Revives Plan

Mr. Brady was cheered at the conclusion of his address, and Mr. Gillmore followed up the "elder statesman's" call for union ripe for united effort."

"Once more Equity intends to make representations to the producers, the dramatists and other factors in the theatre. This time Mr. Brady has pledged his considerable influence to the furtherance of the effort to bring theatrical union out of chaos. And this time the producers and the dramatists are both in a more amicable mood because of the recent settlement of their own differences. It is possible, therefore, that this is that propitious moment, for which the theatre has so long waited, when the time is ripe for united effort."

Meanwhile, the fight of the motion picture companies for more advantageous terms in the disposal of plays for film rights continues, with indications, however, for an early settlement of the differences. A joint committee of the Dramatists Guild and the League of New York Theatres already has shown a disposition to extend the olive branch to Hollywood, without whose financial backing Broadway will find it difficult, if not impossible, to have a successful season.

The film companies remain adamant that there will be no financing of the stage unless the terms are made part of the recently adopted five-year dramatist-producer contract. Under the adopted procedure, instructions governing the sale of film rights to a picture-backed play shall be those in effect at the time such backing is disclosed to the negotiator.

Except for commitments already made, Warner Brothers is following the action of other picture companies in withdrawing financing from Broadway stage productions next season, unless a settlement is reached.

The council of Actors' Equity has ordered a mail referendum on a proposed constitutional amendment calling for 50 weeks of work and two years of membership as the qualification for junior members to become senior members. The referendum is to begin not later than September 15, the voting to end October 16.

CHINA ADMITS FOREIGN PRODUCERS AND RAISES LOCAL PRODUCT QUOTA

New Regulations Require Advance Stipulation of Raw Film to Be Used, Exterior Locations, and Approval of Script

by J. P. KOEHLER
in Shanghai

The Chinese Government has issued a new set of regulations, which are revised from the older ones, under which foreigners are permitted to make motion pictures in Chinese territory. These regulations do not differ substantially from those which govern the making of pictures by Chinese producers.

That section dealing with the submission of a story and scenario script for approval before permission is given to turn a crank is applicable to Chinese films also, and the section dealing with passports is common to all travelers, as are the sections dealing with observation of local laws.

There are, however, several debatable points on which difficulties will undoubtedly arise.

One is the rule which requires the intended length of raw film to be taken. Undoubtedly this is meant as a check against any footage being filmed that cannot be accounted for when the film is finally developed, and to prevent unauthorized shots. However, as every producer knows, the exact raw film to be used in any scene is problematical, and to state before-hand how many feet of raw film are to be used on a scene, before even the location is set up, is scarcely a practical possibility.

Next comes the "definite location" rule. This also must lead to difficulties, unless studio interiors are used.

Then comes a serious technical difficulty, that of enforcing the development of all negatives before exportation is allowed. The facilities for proper development of film in China are extremely limited, despite efforts being made to improve such matters. Of course, it may be possible for the foreign producers to set up a travelling laboratory, or even localize one in Shanghai where his own expert technicians can carry on the important development and printing work.

Censorship Is Rigid

Then there is the general rule governing the taking of scenes detrimental to the dignity to the Chinese people. The rule is laudable, and when applied to acts tending to ridicule the Chinese, no matter what class they may be, it can and should be enforced. But scenes of Chinese working classes are at present being cut out of all foreign pictures.

For instance: take rickshaws. At least 10,000 operate on the streets of Shanghai, and some 30,000 pullers endeavor to live by these means in Shanghai alone. It is a scene which is so common to all the world that it does not even create comment. Yet the Chinese Censors forbid any scene showing a rickshaw being pulled by a native, as detrimental to the dignity of the Chinese people. The same applies to scenes showing laborers pulling hand-carts, coolies doing heavy work.

Text of the new regulations follows:

ART. I—All foreigners who produce motion picture films within the territory of the Republic of China should comply with the provisions of the regulations.

ART. II—All foreigners who produce motion picture films in China should present a copy of the scenario or continuity with Chinese translation and apply to the Ministry of Interior for review and approval.

ART. III—After securing the approval of the Ministry of Interior from the latter the said foreign producers should apply for a license or permit to produce the film in China and, according to law, shall secure a passport for foreigners to travel to the interior parts of China.

ART. IV—All foreign film producers shall be accompanied and supervised by representatives of the local government. In case of need supervision shall be exercised by men sent by the Ministry of Interior in collaboration with the Central Movie Censorship Board.

ART. V—The production permit shall record the following items:

1. Name and address of producer in Chinese and English.
2. Name of representative of producer in Chinese and English.
3. Nationality.
4. Government agency which issued the travel passport to interior China and number of the passport.
5. Accession number of the scenario.
6. Outline or synopsis of the contents of the film and the intended length of the raw film to be taken.
7. Definite location of the exterior setting.
8. Period during which the production permit is effective.
9. Name of director.
10. Names of players and technicians.
11. Name of supervisor in general.

ART. VI—Those foreigners who have secured the permit to produce films in China should present the name to the local government authority for inspection and should observe the laws within that locality.

ART. VII—Those foreigners without production permit, who produce in concealment, if disclosed shall have their negatives and equipments held by the local government who shall report the case to the Ministry of Interior for action.

ART. VIII—In case foreign producers violate any of the following provisions, the local government should stop them at once; hold the negatives in custody pending the action of the Ministry of Interior:

1. Producing scenes detrimental to the honor of the Chinese people.
2. Producing scenes in violation of the Three Principles of the people.
3. Producing scenes of harmful customs and habits.
4. Producing scenes of superstition and undesirable supernatural mystery.
5. Producing scenes of strategy points and fortresses of national defense.
6. Producing scenes that violate other censorship regulations.

ART. IX—After production the negatives should be developed and printed in China and according to law application made to the Central Movie Censorship Board for review and approval before sending them out of the country.

ART. X—These regulations shall be endorsed by the Executive Yuan and then become effective.

ART. XI—If there is insufficient provision later on the Ministry of Interior shall be requested to apply to the Executive Yuan for permission to revise those regulations.

Government Orders Exhibitors to Make Up Programs with Minimum of Sixty Per Cent Local Film; Scarcity a Problem

News has been received that the Canton government has ordered all cinemas operating under their supervision to show 60 per cent Chinese made films and only 40 per cent foreign films. It is difficult to see how the Cantonese cinemas can survive, as there are certainly not sufficient native films to fill 60 per cent of the playing time without numerous and unprofitable extended or repeat runs. It should certainly mean a reduction in the government's tax income from cinema entertainment. However, it is in line with other policies emanating from the same source. Nanking remains silent on the Canton censor fee dispute.

Music Copyright Ineffective

Reading of the music tax troubles at home makes us think about that situation here in China.

Practically every sheet of music sold is a reproduction, printed locally in Shanghai, of the original. Tens of thousands of copies are sold annually in music shops and cinemas at C.20 cents per copy (about 6½ c. U. S.). It is standard full size sheet music, and most of it is used in connection with exploitation of motion pictures.

Orchestrations are also copies in full and sold at C.75 cents per set for a nine-piece orchestra, such as are commonly seen in all cabarets in Shanghai, the method being to make photo engravings and turn out copies wholesale.

Attempts have been made to force radio stations in the Shanghai to pay for record-broadcasts, but no success has been attained along such lines. As it stands, China is a "free port" for all music broadcasts and pirating of foreign music.

Ticket Tax Stands

Efforts are being made by the Hongkong cinemas to have the present heavy entertainment tax reduced and a campaign fund has been raised to carry on the work. The tax is now (Hongkong dollars):

Tickets up to: 24 cents	$.00 tax
25 cents to 50 cents	.05 tax
51 cents to 99 cents	.10 tax
Over $1.00	.20 tax

As this tax is off the top, before computing percentages, distributors are keenly interested in the outcome of this effort towards reduction.

Censorship Costly

Distributors in Hongkong have been facing an unduly heavy censorship charge in this district for the past few years and all previous efforts to get a reduction have failed.

The censor screening rooms are owned and operated by a private individual who is also the operator of a local subsequent run cinema. It is alleged that the Hongkong Police censors receive only 80 cents per reel out of a charge of HK $4.00 per reel, the balance going to the owner of the screening room.

THEATRES FACE SHARP COMPETITION FROM FILMS FOR POLITICAL DRIVES

Exhibitors Warned by Distributors and Own Leaders That Present Situation Calls for Showmanship as Never Before

Presidential campaign plans of both Democrats and Republicans are admitted by both parties to bear out the fears of exhibitors everywhere that the political war this year, expected to be the bitterest this century, will pit motion pictures and elaborate radio shows staged by the national committees of the two parties, against showmen in competition for the attention of the public in a manner never before equaled.

Publicity strategists in the opposing camps will be given unusually large appropriations this year and even now, before the campaigns have been mapped, party leaders say that full use will be made of the screen and the air waves to spread the political gospels, augmenting the efforts of the party "orators." These two agencies of publicity are considered two of three most valuable methods of dissemination and this year they will compete, for the first time, for first place with the third medium, the newspapers.

Faced with the threat of the unprecedented political ballyhoo, in the effort to reach and convert voters, exhibitors have already been warned by spokesmen for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, and their own national organizations that they must be prepared to fight the competition with unusually strong showmanship efforts.

The exact form which this politico-amusement competition will take has not been defined by either party as yet. The Democrats are holding plans for picture and air propaganda until after the proceedings of the convention at Philadelphia this week.

At Democratic national headquarters, in New York, it was said this week that the course to be taken by the publicity staff will depend on whether any changes are made in the campaign organization during this week's convention. Conferences to lay out and coordinate motion picture and radio operations are being held by party chiefs and the publicity experts and definite plans are expected to be disclosed any day.

Expect Chief Problem in Radio

John Hamilton, campaign manager for the Republican nominee, Governor Alf M. Landon, has been deep in conferences on ways and means since the close of the Cleveland G. O. P. nomination session, but he has not yet developed a specific program in the radio or motion picture fields. It was said, however, at both Republican national headquarters in Washington and at the radio division offices of the Republican Committee in New York that the campaign will be "extremely broad" in character. It was said that the plans may call for elaborate radio shows to be staged in conjunction with nationwide addresses by campaign orators.

Motion picture exhibitors believe that this radio form of the campaign competition will prove the hardest to meet. In the last few years political parties have made increasing use of the peak entertainment hours in the early evening for broadcasting speeches. This year they expect to carry this policy to its logical conclusion by employing expensive talent to draw larger audienes for the campaign speeches over national networks. With record appropriations for publicity due in both camps, showmen believe that scheduled radio hours will draw heavily on evening theatre crowds.

In the motion picture field itself, political plans are less definite. The candidates and their armies of orators will make the usual strong bids for attention in the newsreels. The newsreel companies are expected to maintain their traditional policy of nonpartisanship and match footage for footage between the two parties. This policy already has been inaugurated in the equal coverage given the two conventions. That either party will succeed in gaining any advantage over the other through the newsreels or through the release of propaganda reels for theatre presentation is believed highly improbable.

Sound Trucks Another Rival

Secondary competition, it is foreseen by exhibitors, will come through the use of sound projection trucks which will be used in the larger cities. These trucks, carrying comedies or short subjects as well as filmed speeches by the candidates and party leaders, have been increasingly employed in local campaigns.

Distributors and theatre owners' organizations are issuing warnings to exhibitors that particularly strong and well-directed showmanship efforts must be made to meet the competition of the political ballyhoo. The campaign will get actually underway early next month and while it will not reach a crescendo until the fall the anticipated bitterness of the struggle guarantees that the heavy guns will be booming all summer with an increasing challenge to the theatre.

Loew's Expected To Net $5.50 a Share For Year

Earnings of Loew's Inc. for the 12-week period ending about June 6 were estimated by financial editors this week at $1.50 a common share against 88 cents a share a year ago with prospects of a total of $5.50 a share for the fiscal year ending August 31st.

Censor Appointed

Mrs. Harry T. Phoebus has been appointed a member of the Maryland State Board of Motion Picture Censors to replace Asa C. Sharp whose term expired May 6. She is the second woman member of the board.

Tournament Planned

The Cleveland Variety Club will hold its annual golf tournament on July 11.

F&M Transaction Nears Completion

Ernest L. Wilkinson, attorney for Fanchon and Marco, is in New York from Washington to wind up final details in connection with Harry C. Arthur's acquisition of Warner Brothers three theatres in St. Louis and a 42 per cent interest in the St. Louis Amusement Company, operating 20 neighborhood houses and now in receivership with Nelson Cunliff as court's representative.

Provided the few unsettled legal points are ironed out satisfactorily by all interests, F and M will assume management of the Shubert-Rialto, Orpheum and Hi-Pointe on July 3. Every effort will be made to clean up the deal this week, it is said.

Reports have been current that Balaban and Katz is angling for the 52 per cent interest in the St. Louis Amusement Company, which is owned by Skouras Brothers Enterprises. Jules Ruben, an affiliate of B and K, has been in St. Louis to look over the situation.

Mr. Cunliff, it is understood, is preparing to reorganize the neighborhood circuit. He is believed to have the support of Mr. Arthur, whose stock interest, pooled with the 52 per cent which Mr. Cunliff represents, would make 94 per cent stock backing in the rehabilitation plan to be presented to the Federal court. A reorganization of the St. Louis Amusement Company would eliminate any outsiders from entering into the setup. Mr. Arthur most likely will operate the 20 theatres under the new plan.

Education by Film Shown At Teachers' Convention

New methods of adding interest and effectiveness to high school education by means of motion picture films will be demonstrated at the annual convention of the Department of Secondary Education of the National Education Association at Portland, Oregon, on July 1st.

The Oriental theatre, one of the largest in Portland, will be used for the exhibition. For purposes of discussion the Department will show a preview of a new screen biography of Shakespeare, including the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet" with Norma Shearer and Leslie Howard. The program will also include an issue of "The March of Time" and a new British "documentary" type of play, "The Face of Britain," made by Paul Rotha for the Gaumont British company.

Golf Tourney Planned

Iowa exhibitors have been invited to enter a golf tournament to be sponsored by the Variety Club, of Des Moines, on July 13 and 14. Entrants are asked to send applications to Stanley Mayer of Twentieth Century-Fox at Des Moines.

ARGENTINA SENATE CONSIDERS PRODUCERS QUOTA PROPOSALS

Penalties Include Closing and Fine; Estimated Law Would Cut Present Importations from 600 a Year to 400

by NATALIO BRUSKI
in Buenos Aires

As a result of the considerable development and growth of the Argentine motion picture industry, an initiative born from a group of local producers has been presented to the National Senate and is presently under study. The proposal calls for a scheme for immediate protection and aid to this industry and the President of the Republic, according to our information, has endorsed the plan soliciting Congress for approval of same.

Although the clauses that embody the proposal have not been made public and are maintained in absolute silence, the writer has been able to gather interesting information which still awaits, nevertheless official confirmation.

Producers Association Urged

A few months ago several delegations representing our most important producers met in Casa del Cine (Motion Picture Club), and afterwards in the offices of the local producer, P.A.F., with the object of unifying views and to petition the corresponding authorities for official measures of protection to the Argentine motion picture industry, measures which would also act as a stimulant to this industry, now developed without official help or recognition.

At that time the producers proposed the formation of a single institution to be dominated A.P.P.A. "Asociacion de Productores de Peliculas Argentinas" (Association of Argentine Film Producers), and several forms of aid were considered, amongst which one became prominent as it called for the showing of no less than 5% of Argentine films. With the approval of this demand the Argentine motion picture industry would obtain a showing of no less than 20 films a year manufactured exclusively under the responsibility and risk of companies of foreign origin dedicated to the exploitation of our market.

The matter, however, went no further and remained at that.

Committee Is Formed

Some time later, nevertheless, a committee formed of Drs. Guerrico, Naon and Sussini and Mr. Arturo Mom took the matter to the Ministry of Agriculture, which controls the industries of the country, and to personalities of influence within the Presidency of the Republic, presenting proposal of a law to be known as "Protection and Development of the Argentine Motion Picture Industry," and which specifies the following:

"Every motion picture house situated within the Argentine territory, irrespective of its condition or category, will be forced to show Argentine productions. Argentine films will be considered those manufactured within the country and also in foreign lands, but with machines, stories, capitals and manpower of Argentine origin.

"Fines will be applied to proprietors or lessors of motion picture houses who should not act accordingly. The first infraction of the law would bring about a closure of the house for 24 or 48 hours, or in its place a fine, to be also established. The second infraction will result in the closure of the house from 15 to 30 days and further repetition would mean a fine of 30,000 pesos (around $11,000 at the actual exchange).

"The approval of this proposal would mean that all motion picture houses would be under obligation to exhibit Argentine films in the same conditions and rental as those of any foreign producer.

Standards Controlled

"A special committee would also be formed to establish the grade of technical perfection and moral background of each Argentine film. This committee would be formed by representatives of the Ministries of Agriculture Interior and Public Education, as well as representatives of the Exhibitors Association, Distributors Association and Motion Picture Press."

We wish to state that all this information lacks official confirmation, as nothing has yet been definitely established. We feel sure, however, that this proposal will undergo substantial alterations before it is considered and definitely approved.

Upon consultation by the MOTION PICTURE HERALD representative, Dr. Sussini, a member of the above mentioned committee, stated that this law would in no way impair the importation of quality productions by enterprises of European and American origin, but admitted that the immediate consequence would be a lowering of importations, adding that "the foreign producers instead of bringing 600 features per year, that quantity would be reduced to 400."

We are inclined to believe that the pretentions of the local producers, though natural and necessary, are somewhat exaggerated considering its actual stage of development. If protection is required it should be more sensible to suppress all taxes on raw material destined to the production of Argentine films which would include the necessary machinery.

Report on Christie Ready For Hearing

A final hearing on the report of Referee Hugh L. Dickson on the bankruptcy of Christie Film Company was to be made this week in Los Angeles. The report shows receipts of $9,505.14, disbursements of $3,693.47 and a balance of $5,811.67. Total claims approved and allowed have been $227,096.19.

Horne Leaves for Coast

Hal Horne, whose appointment as producer of RKO-Radio pictures was announced last week at the RKO convention at the Waldorf, has left New York for Hollywood.

Rumors of Deal In Stock False, Declares Ostrer

Reports of an intended stock deal with Twentieth Century-Fox were denied by Isidore Ostrer, chairman of the Gaumont British board, on his arrival in New York this week on the Queen Mary to study the company's American activities in an effort to develop more revenue from this market.

A definite program for a gradual increase in business will probably be laid down as a result of this visit, Mr. Ostrer declared. There is nothing to substantiate rumors linking his company in a stock deal with the Twentieth Century-Fox Company, he said.

The British executive characterized as "basically without importance" speculation over an offer from the Greenfriars Investment Trust for a half interest in the Denham Trust, an investment company largely interested in Gaumont British, and providing for the purchase of 412,138 £1 shares at 23 shillings, six pence. Pointing out that by this arrangement the stock becomes marketable Mr. Ostrer said a good part of stock has been taken up and there "is no particular significance to the deal."

Max Milder, Warner Brothers branch head in England, also a passenger on the new liner, tendered Mr. Ostrer a birthday party on the boat during the voyage. Mr. Milder's trip is only his annual vacation to America, he told reporters on landing. Business is exceptionally good in England, he declared, new theatre building going on a moderate rate, and old houses being remodeled.

T. Dodds, chairman of the board of Atlantic Film Products, Ltd., was another arrival on the Queen Mary. He reported that he came over to talk to United Artists and RKO executives on the American and Canadian distribution rights to "Thunder in the City." Edward G. Robinson, now in London, will start work on the picture at Denham studios in two weeks.

Mr. Dodds met later this week with Arthur W. Kelly and James Mulvey of United Artists. This company has all other distribution rights to the picture, the chairman of the new company said. He plans to remain until July 3 when he will sail on the Ile de France. About £70,000 will be spent on "Thunder in the City," the executive said. Two more pictures are planned this year and three or four next season, he added.

Jersey Manager Killed

Peter Ryan, 44, manager of the Broad Theatre at Penn's Grove, N. J., was instantly killed last Monday night when his car crashed into a telephone pole after sideswiping another car near Carney's Point, N. J. He had been manager of the Broad for the past four years.

WILLIAM FOX SAYS HIS MILLIONS ARE GONE, NOW HE MUST BORROW

Bitter Session Awaited When Creditors' Attorneys Start Questioning at Resumption of Bankruptcy Hearing July 10th

William Fox, 57, bald and bothered, while trying to explain a voluntary petition in bankruptcy, dolorously testified this week in a courtroom crowded with skeptical creditors that his fortune of "millions and millions and millions of dollars" has dwindled away to nothing, and that now he must borrow $100 here and another $100 elsewhere in order to pay the lawyers who defend him in the seemingly endless litigation involving him.

In contrast with the picture he drew in his testimony stood these facts: The Chase National Bank paid him $15,000,000 in cash, six years ago, for his personal holdings in the Fox Film companies; he admittedly created an irrevocable trust fund for his wife and family, in 1931, totaling $6,900,000, and even after establishing that trust fund, he had $14,000,000 of his own; millions of dollars in life insurance have been assigned within the last year to his wife; not forgetting that Mr. Fox, some three years ago, was called before a Senate investigating committee for allegedly making additional millions in the stock market.

The socalled "rise and fall" of William Fox were mentioned by him in his testimony in the $9,535,261 voluntary bankruptcy petition, before Robert E. Steedle, federal referee in bankruptcy, at the opening hearing in Atlantic City, on Monday. Mr. Steedle completed his questioning of the petitioner, and then adjourned the proceedings until July 10th. On that date the creditors' attorneys will begin doing the questioning, with a bitter and protracted session expected. They obtained authorization Monday from Referee Steedle to examine the William Fox books and records in advance by way of preparation.

Tells of Trust Fund

The pioneer, who came from Hungary as a child with his immigrant parents and learned the motion picture business as a New York theatre manager, testified as follows:

"In January, 1931, I created an irrevocable trust for my wife, daughters and grandchildren. My wife is trustee. It consisted of securities, stocks and bonds, totaling about $6,900,000.

"When I made that trust it left me still with investments of $14,000,000. I had not a debt in the world that could not be liquidated for a few hundred dollars. There was not a single lawsuit against me, and I had no reason to believe there would be any blackmailing lawsuits. I was as solvent as it is humanly possible for any one to be; I had millions and millions and millions of dollars in assets."

The witness spoke with strong emotion, the first revealed in the public proceedings, as though nettled by charges of transferring assets to evade debtors. A moment later he volunteered that the $100 cash on hand, listed in the bankruptcy petition, is gone.

John Brown a la Russe

Uncle Sam's WPA federal theatre project announces that Michael Blankfort, co-author of "Battle Hymn" with Michael Gold, Communist writer, will spend the summer preparing a long version of the WPA play about John Brown, the hero of Harper's Ferry, which by pre-arrangement will be published and produced in Russia.

The play currently is appearing at the project's Experimental theatre in New York, where the engagement has been extended to mid-July. Meanwhile, copies of the New York version are being prepared for other WPA federal theatre units throughout the country, it was announced.

"I paid it to a lawyer," he said, "and borrowed another hundred."

Explains All-Continent Corporation

The All-Continent Corporation of Mr. Fox, whose $417,258 claim was attacked last Friday by creditors as "false and fictitious," was explained by Mr. Fox when he took the stand Monday.

"It is an investment corporation," he said, "now located here in Atlantic City. Mrs. Fox and our daughters, Mona and Belle, are its officers. I don't know its assets."

Referee Steedle did not mention at the Monday session the charge made Friday by Samuel B. Stewart, Jr., New York counsel for some of the creditors, that "$7,084,740 has been paid by Mr. Fox to his own All-Continent without real consideration, to put his assets beyond reach of creditors."

As for the several million dollars in life insurance policies, Mr. Fox declared they have been assigned within the last year to his wife, after being borrowed upon "up to the limit," and that she now pays the premium.

Says Investments Went "Sour"

He recited a long list of investments which "have gone sour," in most cases denying knowledge whether the corporations still exist. Closed banks and radio companies, a New York hotel and "some chemical company that had some process for shining shoes," were included. He did not know where the hotel "The San Remo" is, but bought its bonds "through a member of a golf club." He added that there also was a $1,000 bond of the Broadway Temple building "but I can't find it."

Mr. Fox insisted, however, that his 125 shares, or one-quarter interest, in the East Palm Beach Land and Development Company, Ltd., is not hopeless, because "I hear there is a boom down there."

Hears Fraud Charged

Earlier in the proceeding, Mr. Fox listened calmly as charges of fraud and of solicitation of claims to control the election of a trustee were read into the record at the hearing on his $9,535,261 bankruptcy petition.

Former Producer Who Was Paid $15,000,000 Cash Six Years Ago Testifies He Has Paid Out His Last $100

Federal Referee Steedle opened the hearing by running slowly through a list of 43 claims against Mr. Fox, and calling for the claimants' votes in an effort to elect a trustee. Every claim was protested by one or more of the others. A majority of them in number voted for Albert N. Shahadi, Atlantic City attorney, but a majority in value of claims, including the group attacking Mr. Fox, voted for Clarence E. Knauer, another local lawyer.

The technical deadlock left the trustee's appointment up to Mr. Steedle, who took it under advisement.

When, on Friday, the referee first personally questioned Mr. Fox on some of the assets listed in the bankruptcy petition, Mr. Fox's memory appeared hazy, and his questioning was postponed until Monday.

Walter Hanstein, of Atlantic City, with several New York lawyers, represented the Chicago Title and Trust Company and the Capital Company, a subsidiary of A. P. Giannini's Bank of Italy. He urged that before any election of a trustee, there should be a complete examination of Fox, to disclose his connection with any candidate for trustee.

Referee Steedle overruled this plea.

Mr. Knauer was supported as trustee by Chicago Title and Trust Co., which recently had a claim of $1,000,000 plus interest against Mr. Fox approved by Referee Sol Stroock in New York, and by Capital Company, San Francisco theatre owner, which holds a judgment of $240,000 against Mr. Fox, and which company recently filed an action in New York against him for $287,000, both claims being based on a defaulted lease on a San Francisco theatre guaranteed by Mr. Fox. It was disclosed at the hearing that Capital Company is a subsidiary of the Giannini Bank of Italy.

Calls Claims Fictitious

It was at this point that Samuel B. Stewart, Jr., attorney for Capital Company, charged that the $417,258 claim filed against Fox by All-Continent Company and several others, were fictitious; that the corporations making the claims were dominated by Mr. Fox and some of them created by him, and that they received "all of their assets from him by fraudulent transfers to escape creditors."

Mr. Stewart charged that a majority of the claims voted for Mr. Shahadi as trustee "must have been procured or solicited at the instance of or in behalf of Fox for the purpose of being voted in his behalf at this meeting." He charged that Fox had paid All-Continent $7,084,740 "without real consideration"; that the company's stock was all owned by Mrs. Eva Fox and that all of the officers and directors were members of the Fox family.

It was also alleged at the hearing that the claims of Aronberg-Fried Company for $200,000; Parkwood Corporation for $146,665; Eva Fox, $5,475; Belle Fox, $35,000, and Mona Fox, $10,000, as well as others, were "fictitious."

LOEW-MGM BUILDING THEATRES ABROAD TO INSURE REPRESENTATION

26 Houses Already Operating or Under Construction, and 12 More Will Open Shortly; To Extend Movement Further

New Theatres Overseas Found Attracting Thousands Who Are Not Picture-goers, Says Arthur Loew, Now Back Home

The Loew-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer interests, headed by Nicholas Michael Schenck, are transplanting the "touch" of the deep-divan-seated and plush-carpeted deluxe Broadway movie "palace" to the remotest corners of the globe. The plan is aimed to obtain for the MGM picture-making and picture-selling subsidiaries an outlet for the corporation's product where such outlets are not otherwise obtainable, due either to the lack of "suitable" show places, or—and as is principally the reason—aimed at penetration of existing barriers set up by native interests.

Resurrecting the oldest method employed by the large interests to build where their motion pictures cannot otherwise be disposed of, the Loew-Metro interests already have 26 theatres in operation or in actual construction abroad, and 12 more will soon be completed.

Arthur Loew, son of Marcus, the founder of the present Loew enterprises is now reporting to the management in New York on the progress being made, after a world tour. He has for years had a most active supervision over the corporation's foreign expansion, traveling the globe by plane.

Mr. Loew on Wednesday admitted at the home office at Longacre Square, that "there is an intense MGM activity in the erection of cinemas abroad.

"Metro foreign distributing companies build houses when they are convinced that M-G-M productions cannot be presented in theatres representative of M-G-M's standards. That these standards are high is testified by the fact that 26 theatres are now in operation or in active construction under the direct supervision of M-G-M distributing companies abroad," explained Mr. Loew.

In the past few months, there have been opened the Metro theatre in Calcutta, India, the Cine Metro in Lima, Peru, and the Teatro Metro in Santiago, Chile. About a dozen more will soon be completed.

"Each of these new houses was built by the finest native architectural talent under the supervision of the Loew Theatres construction department in New York City," continued Mr. Loew. "These theatres are not only the last word in construction, equipment and appointments, according to our American standards, but added to Broadway's conception of the perfect cinema are those subtle refinements of taste and comfort arising from the native culture in each locality." Mr. Loew believes that "New York, London and Paris might well envy the architecture, projection, sound reproduction, ventilation and furnishings of any of the theatres now being placed under the supervision of M-G-M distributors abroad."

Worldwide Theatres

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER'S
"A TALE OF TWO CITIES"
METRO

Typical of the theatres being erected by Loew's-Metro in their worldwide theatre expansion program is the Metro theatre in Calcutta, India, as reproduced above, standing in the straight architectural lines of modernity.

Mr. Loew further reports that even at this early date the houses are having "phenomenal financial success," proving "definitely," he added, "that there were voids in the foreign motion picture field which the new (American-sponsored) theatres have filled."

"It will be the Metro policy that whenever a similar void is found, the MGM distributing companies will erect new cinemas properly," continued the company's foreign chief.

He said he found that a well-built, comfortable house, showing good pictures, is as great an aid in making new fans abroad. "New theatres usually attract to themselves thousands of local residents who are not picture-goers, but who attend such new theatres as a result of curiosity—or pride in a new point of civic beauty. Once their attendance is obtained, they go again and again and become rabid fans, attending not only the new theatre but all the others. The motion picture habit once contracted is a hard one to break. Pictures are the universal form of entertainment for low-brow, high-brow, and medium-brow in every country. But sometimes it is difficult to tap the great channels of non-movie-going public, until they are aroused from their inertia by a new theatre."

A new Metro theatre will be opened in Rio de Janeiro in September. In Montevideo, Uruguay, a new Metro theatre will open either in September or October and a new Metro Cinema is in course of construction in Brisbane, Australia, scheduled for fall opening. These houses will each have approximately 1,500 seats each.

In South Africa, apart from the Metro Theatre now operating in Johannesburg, new cinemas are about to be constructed at Durban and Capetown. In both cities, property was purchased for this purpose by Arthur Loew during his recent trip. In Japan, construction is about to start on the Metro Cinema in the Hibiya section of Tokyo. As part of this construction and adjacent to it, there is to be an office building, every office of which will be air-conditioned.

Negotiations are now in progress for additional sites for Metro Theatres in Osaka, Japan; Bombay, India; Colombo, Ceylon; and many other points.

'Pastures' Banned By English Censor

"The Green Pastures," Warner Brothers feature, has been banned from showing throughout England by order of the Lord Chamberlain. The objection is based on the fact that the film portrays the Deity in human form. The Pulitzer Prize winning stage play by Marc Connelly, from which the picture was adapted, likewise was banned in England in 1930 for the same reason.

The Reverend Pat McCormick, rector of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, has written to the London office of Warners that, after seeing the picture, he can see no objection to showing it in his church. The Lord Chamberlain is the head of the British Board of Film Censors, and no appeal from its decision is possible, except to the board itself. A storm of protest followed the banning of the Connelly play in 1930.

In Toronto, the Ontario Board of Motion Picture Censors banned the picture on the grounds of being sacrilegious, according to O. J. Silverthorne, a member of the board. Distributors of the picture in Canada will appeal for a new ruling. The picture will be viewed again by a special appeal board within two weeks, but it was said Monday that it "had not a chance" of passing.

The stage play has been presented in Canada and made three appearances in Toronto. The motion picture board, however, has no jurisdiction over stage plays.

Censor Ban Upheld

Action of the new York State censors in barring the exhibition of Guaranteed's French film, "Jeanne," has been upheld by the Commissioner in Albany on appeal. Guaranteed is planning to carry the appeal to the courts.

PARAMOUNT BOARD NAMES GRIFFIS EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN

New Committee Chairman Partner in Hemphill, Noyes & Co. Since 1917, and Is in Several Other Companies

Austin C. Keough, secretary of Paramount Pictures, Inc., issued the following statement late Wednesday afternoon from the corporation's headquarters in the Paramount tower overlooking Times Square:

"At a meeting of the board of directors of Paramount Pictures, Inc., held today (Wednesday), the following directors were elected members of the executive committee:

Adolph Zukor, Paramount Pictures.

Stanton Griffis, Hemphill, Noyes & Co., brokers.

Barney Balaban, Paramount theatres.

Neil F. Agnew, Paramount film distribution.

John Hertz, Lehman Brothers, bankers.

Maurice Newton, Hallgarten Company, brokers.

Duncan Harris, Brown, Wheelock & Harris Company, real estate.

Stephen Callaghan, Allied Owners Corporation, real estate investors.

"The board of directors elected Stanton Griffis chairman of the executive committee. All other action on the election of officers of the corporation was deferred until the regular meeting of the board for the month of June."

The "regular meeting for June" mention by Mr. Keough was the meeting scheduled for Thursday afternoon, in the same place, subject, of course, to another postponement of the business of electing a president. Although it was not officially explained by the corporation, it was understood that at Wednesday's board meeting, specially called, a majority of the directors had not reached an agreement on a candidate for the presidency. Adolph Zukor, however, still appeared, on Wednesday night, to be the leading candidate.

Mr. Zukor had been president of the various Paramount corporate evolutions for some 21 years until the 1933 disturbances of receivership—president since the January morning in 1912 when he split a partnership with Marcus Loew and founded Famous Players Film Company. Then, in January, 1933, the corporation was admitted to be in a state of receivership and Mr. Zukor's management was eventually displaced by three trustees in bankruptcy, Charles D. Hilles, Charles E. Richardson and Eugene Leake. When the bankruptcy was declared at an end, on January 17, 1936, John Edward Otterson was elected president of the reorganization and Mr. Zukor became chairman of the board.

At their annual meeting in New York on Tuesday one week ago, Paramount stockholders elected five new members to the directorate, and then enlivened the session frequently by insistent questioning of officers as to the status of Mr. Otterson. Failure at that time to name President Otterson as a candidate for re-election to the board in accordance with a company bylaw specifying that the president shall be a director caused the stockholders to speculate openly over Mr. Otterson's future status. Their inquiries as to the significance of the circumstances were not answered. However, Mr. Griffis, as a board member, in quoting a signboard in a western barroom of boyhood acquaintance, suggested to the hundred-odd stockholders present, "Don't shoot the piano player—he's doing the best he can."

STANTON GRIFFIS

Mr. Griffis, the new chairman of the executive committee, which manages the corporate affairs, has been a partner in Hemphill, Noyes and Company since 1917. He is chairman of the board of the Madison Square Garden Corporation, and of Brentano's Book Stores, Inc., and a director of Thatcher Manufacturing Corporation, Lee Rubber and Tire Company, Shur-on Standard Optical Company, Lefcourt Realty Company and the Osgood Company.

Mr. Griffis was born in Boston, 48 years ago, graduated from Cornell University in 1910, and resides in New Canaan, Connecticut.

Named Members of Board

The Paramount board as it is now constituted includes the following members, besides Mr. Zukor and Mr. Griffis:

Judge Stephen Callaghan, representing Allied Owners Corporation, H. A. Fortington, formerly with Royal Insurance group; Duncan G. Harris, Brown, Wheelock & Harris Company; John D. Hertz, Lehman Brothers; Harvey D. Gibson, Manufacturers Trust Company; Charles A. McCulloch, First National Bank of Chicago; Maurice Newton, Hallgarten Company; Floyd B. Odlum, Atlas; H. O. King, Allied Owners Corporation; Earl A. McClintock, vice-president, Sterling Products Company; A. Conger Goodyear, president, Museum of Modern Art; Neil Agnew, vice-president in charge of Paramount sales; Barney Balaban, of Balaban & Katz, and E. V. Richards, Saenger Amusement Corporation.

Committee Includes Adolph Zukor, Barney Balaban, Neil Agnew, John Hertz, M. Newton, D. Harris, S. Callaghan

Joseph P. Kennedy, who had been mentioned as a candidate for the presidency, had declared last week that he would not be available for any post in Paramount. He has discontinued his personal study of the company and his work on the final report, but his aides, John J. Ford and C. J. (Pat) Scollard, are working on individual reports.

Ruling Favors Otterson

So-called "feuds" between members of the board marked the confused situation which preceded the directors' meeting Wednesday. Directors H. A. Fortington and John D. Hertz reputedly have been heading opposing camps. Mr. Fortington recently resigned as chairman of the company's executive committee, but he is said to have no intention of leaving the board before the expiration of his term in 1938. Mr. Hertz's term expires next year and he, too, is said to be determined to remain until that time at least. It was primarily at his insistance that the board retained Mr. Kennedy for the company survey.

A new Federal court ruling which held Paramount liable for damages for breach of an employment contract held by Sam Katz, former vice-president and director of the company, was viewed this week as being favorable to Mr. Otterson's present contractual status, leading observers believed that he may be given some special assignment by the board, perhaps in connection with production.

Mr. Zukor is now at the Paramount studio and consequently did not attend Wednesday's meeting. It is believed that he will remain at the studio for some time, unless further developments in company affairs make his presence in New York immediately necessary.

Action is due on recommendations for extending the operating contracts for both the Wilby-Kincey and Lucas & Jenkins circuits and for renewing the partnership arrangement with Karl Hoblitzelle for Texas Interstate Theatres on a revised basis. All three operating deals expire on July 1st. On the basis of a committee recommendation to renew the Wilby-Kincey and Lucas & Jenkins contracts and the favorable operating results of both circuits in the past, it is believed that the new contracts will be approved.

The Hoblitzelle partnership agreement involves a 50-50 stock ownership in the theatre company between Mr. Hoblitzelle and Paramount. The company, however, has an option to purchase Mr. Hoblitzelle's half interest. Whether or not this will be exercised is undecided.

PULLMAN MOVIES HIT ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Train Shows Finally Adopted in Midwest, but Insufficient Grosses Are an Obstacle

While others have been experimenting or toying with the idea for years, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad has made motion picture exhibition on trains a reality, presenting nightly performances on its five crack trains between Chicago and Omaha and Denver.

Orton H. Hicks, president of Films, Inc., which for the last nine years has been supplying films to ships, said this week that for the last month his company has been operating picture shows on that line, and that the public reaction has been favorable. The innovation is in an experimental stage, however, and if certain operating problems can be overcome it will be made permanent, he said.

The chief obstacle to its permanency is that the plan does not permit a sufficient gross, it was pointed out. The performances are given in the diners, and hence it is possible to give only one show an evening, at a time when the dining cars are not being used otherwise. Moreover, only 36 patrons can be accommodated in a dining car, and at the admission charge of 25 cents the railroad, even at capacity, grosses barely enough to cover the overhead.

However, Mr. Hicks said that the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy adopted the plan not primarily for a profit but on his explanation that it was a convenience to the passengers. He pointed out to the line officials that the passengers' objection to the tedium of a long train ride could be met by giving them something to do after the evening meal, and that film shows further would have the effect of reducing long trips by 90 minutes, which was in line with various improvements the railroad had made to reduce running time.

One Projectionist to a Train

Moreover, Mr. Hicks pointed out, film shows were a legitimate adjunct to modern railroading as much as free pillows and other comforts provided the passengers, and in view of the reasons enumerated the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy could well afford to spend a small fraction of its $1,000,000 improvement program to experiment with the possibilities.

Films, Inc., has a contract with the railroad to supply the films, one projectionist to a train, equipment and a screen. The deal is on a flat sum basis, and the line retains the revenue.

The performance starts about 9:30 p.m. and ends about 11 p.m., too late to give another show. All films are on non-inflammable 16mm. stock, reduced from regular 35mm. product. Features are booked from Gaumont British, which has had experience with train films in England, and from Universal, Paramount and a few independent companies. Mr. Hicks said he also is negotiating with other companies for feature product, and shorts are obtained from a number of distributors.

Victor and other portable projection equipment is used, and the screen is four feet wide by three feet high.

Says Noises Do Not Mar Show

Mr. Hicks said that the physical conditions under which the films are shown are adequate and demonstrate conclusively that sound motion pictures can be exhibited on trains while in motion. Train noises, blowing of whistles, screeches, jarring and the like do not mar the performances, he said.

The following description of a test in a report of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy indicates the steps necessary to turn a dining car into a moving motion picture theatre:

"In order that the picture might be available for both Pullman and coach passengers, without adding an additional car to the train, it was shown in the dining car at periods when that car would otherwise have been idle. All except the forward two tables were taken down and leaned against the wall at their respective locations. Thirty-five of the chairs were placed in position, leaving an aisle along one side rather than down the center, and enough space at the rear to set up a tripod which held the projector. The 36th chair was placed on one of the forward tables to hold the speaker, and the four-by-three screen was unrolled from a box container which was fastened to the roof, the bottom of the screen being approximately five feet from the floor, so that trainmen or others could pass through the car without interference. Fifteen or 20 minutes were required for these preparations."

Tried on Chicago & Alton

Herman Stern of the Universal home office this week recalled a similar innovation on the Chicago and Alton railroad in 1923, which was short-lived. Believed to have been the first exhibition of films on a train, a demonstration was given to railway executives and newspapermen on February 12 of that year, on a train running between Chicago and St. Louis. Bidding was spirited for the film contract, and Mr. Stern successfully consummated the deal for Universal.

A steel coach, equipped for the purpose, was used as a theatre. Two Acme projectors were installed and a Dalite screen suspended near the ceiling, giving a picture five by four feet. The power for the projector was taken from the car batteries, and a report said that the projection was "without flicker or vibration of any kind."

Arliss Picture Reissued

"The House of Rothschild" and "The Private Life of Henry VIII" have been booked by Loew's through United Artists for the metropolitan circuit. "Dinner at Eight" and "Men in White," also revivals, will start on Loew programs June 30.

Sales Tax Ruling To Be Appealed By Distributors

An immediate appeal from the appellate division decision handed down this week which held that films exhibited in New York City are subject to the two per cent sales tax is planned by United Artists. The court held that films licensed for exhibition outside the city are not subject to the sales tax even though they are supplied by exchanges located within the city.

A recent estimate placed the amount of sales tax on films licensed by city exchanges since the enactment of the tax law at $1,500,000. The decision means that approximately $900,000 in taxes on films which have been exhibited within the city could be collected now if the ruling is not reversed.

Under the decision all theatres in northern New Jersey, Westchester and Long Island counties other than Kings and Queens, representing about two-fifths of the business of the city film exchanges will not be required to pay the city sales tax. All theatres within the five boroughs, however, are subject to the levy.

New York distributors have recognized the case as a test. United Artists, against whom the first tax assessment was made by the city on all films shipped from its metropolitan exchange, took the initiative in contesting the levy. The company's lawyers contend that films are in interstate commerce and therefore not subject to local taxation.

O'Brien, Driscoll and Raftery, attorneys for the distributors, have announced that immediate notice of appeal would be filed with the city. A hearing on the case cannot be obtained in the Court of Appeals at Albany before the opening of its October term.

Whitney To Head Board After Selznick Merger

John Hay Whitney is slated to be chairman of the board of the new company to be formed by the absorption of Pioneer Pictures by Selznick International, it was learned this week after Mr. Whitney admitted that plans for the merger are under way. David O. Selznick will be president and Merian C. Cooper, vice-president. All product will be released through United Artists and will be divided half in Technicolor and half in black and white.

Data on Subsidiaries Withheld in Report

Twentieth Century-Fox Corporation has been granted permission by the Securities Exchange Commission to hold confidential information in its registration statement relating to the names of certain subsidiaries.

Election Rumor Denied

Maurice Silverstone, managing director for United Artists in England, has denied reports that he will be elected president of the parent company. The rumor gained wide circulation on Broadway and Hollywood Boulevard. He is attending the annual sales convention of United Artists in Hollywood.

The newsreels missed the mutiny caused in San Francisco port the other morning by four little pigs.

Iowa State College had shipped the sucklings by express to the San Francisco pier, consigned to Mrs. S. C. Cheng, in Shanghai, China. A crane reached a giant arm over the dock and the tackle was made fast about the pig crate when suddenly the ship's rail swarmed with slim, dark men in white turbans—Mohammedans every one of them, to whom the pig is the most unclean of animals—has not the Prophet said so?

The ship's officers pleaded, cursed expostulated—to no avail. Why should a man endanger his soul by harboring even college-bred hogs, the Mohammedans chattered defiantly in nine different Mohammedan languages. And the suspended pigs added the infuriating overtones of hog-Latin to the hubbub.

The ship's officers finally gave in, the crate was lowered back on the dock and the steamer sailed, pigless, but with a crew exhilarated by spiritual victory.

NEWSPAPER DICTIONARY

Whimsical Dick Sears, who covers New England for Pathe News and codfish-cakes, sends us this dictionary of the newspaper, as dug up from the American Press:

EDITOR: A man who does a lot of independent thinking over the luncheon table and then comes back to the office and writes what the publisher thinks he thinks that day.

MANAGING EDITOR: The guy who gets out the paper when the city editor is sick, unless he can induce one of the copy desk boys to do it.

CITY EDITOR: The mug who knows most of the lowdown about the city's well-known men and women and carefully keeps it out of the paper because printing it would deny him the pleasure of telling his friends "the inside dope."

COPY READER: An egg who never learned grammar or composition.

REWRITE MEN: Lugs who get the story all wrong so that the legmen will get hell for not having the facts straight.

MAKEUP MEN: Printers who get their hands crossed when putting two handsful of type into a form.

STEREOTYPERS: Gorillas who mislay pieces of packing right behind the face of the cinema cutie on the page one mat.

LINOTYPE OPERATORS: People who reproduce, in correct English, dialect copy marked "Folo copy."

PROOFREADERS: Cynical and embittered $50-a-week men who can take an editorial written by a $25,000-a-year editor and make some sense out of it.

BUSINESS MANAGER: A rummy who groans and says: "Seventy-eight cents for meals—and you were gone only four days!" when a reporter hands in a swindle sheet.

NEWSPAPER READER: The person upon whom the eyes of all newspapermen are concentrated—except when engaged in getting out a newspaper.

Bill Crouch writes from Chicago about the theatre patron in Hammond, Indiana, whose name was called in a $1,200 "Bank Night" drawing. The "lucky" fellow was not in the theatre to claim the prize, so the theatre management telephoned him at his home and informed him that he had won the cash, but that in order to collect it he had to get around to the show place inside of three minutes. "Easy," shouted the winner as he banged the phone receiver and dashed to his roadster to burn up anybody's road for $1,200.

The prize winner was as good as his word, until he got to a railroad crossing within a few feet of the theatre. There the red danger lights were blinking and the safety bars were down. The prize-winner-that-might-have been waited 12 minutes at the crossing while a long and slow freight train took its time riding down the tracks, for the very railroad for which the would-be-winner had worked the past 15 years.

After introducing a series of nine pieces of pesty legislation leveled against the motion picture industry, Louisiana's lovely legislators this week voted favorably on a bill introduced by the Committee on Fish, Game and Oysters, compelling lobbyists in the state to wear uniforms of clashing colors. TWO WEEKS STRIKE PARALYZES PICTURE INDUSTRY IN FRANCE

Minister of Labor Puts End to "Stay In" Strike That Closed All Laboratories, Exchanges, Many Theatres

by PIERRE AUTRE
in Paris

Industry leaders and trade union delegates accepted on June 18th a temporary agreement worked out with the Minister of Labor, acting as arbitrator, and brought to a close the strike that had held studios, distribution plants and laboratories inactive for sixteen days.

Labor unions had demanded:

A 40-hour week.
Paid vacations (two weeks).
Abolition of overtime.
Right to have delegates in places of employment.
Closed shop.
Specified health and safety provisions.

It is understood that all demands save that of the closed shop have been complied with under the temporary agreement. Establishment of the 40-hour week, to be paid at the same wage as previously awarded for a longer period, is equivalent to a wage increase of from $7 to $10 monthly.

Loss to the industry through the enforced idleness is calculated in high numerals. Many theatres were closed, and those which did not close have been suffering from depressed business due to the strikes that have affected many lines of work and cut down the public's ability to buy entertainment. At times this result has been added to by general fear of rioting, which has kept many people indoors.

Strike Started June 2

The cinema industry was first directly affected by the strike movement on June 2d when delegates of the Confederation of Trade Unions arrived at the Leopold Maurice Film Developing and Printing Laboratory at Gennevilliers, a suburb of Paris, and ordered the workers to stop. Nobody was allowed to leave the laboratory, the delegates detaining customers, employees of other companies, visitors of every kind. Employees of the laboratory were called into the yard and the demands of the union were read to them. Sheets bearing the demands were then distributed among them and each, by signing his name, became a member of the union.

On the following day the Eclair Studios at Epinay and the Pathe-Cinema Studios in Paris were handled in the same way, and later in the afternoon the union leaders extended their sway to include the G. F. F. A., the Gaumont studios in Paris. Following, next morning, were the Liano Film Laboratory and the Paramount Studios, and then production stopped dead throughout the area, newsreels released on the day prior to the first action having to serve exhibitors indefinitely, as no further releases could be made.

On Thursday, June 4, the activities of the trade union delegates were made felt in the cinemas. The Gaumont Palace and Rex were first visited. Managements of these houses asked the staff (machinists, electricians, projectionists and ushers) to submit their demands for consideration and name delegates to confer with them while the work was being carried on. This offer was refused and the theatres closed.

Other houses closed immediately afterward, under the same conditions (those of a "stay-in" strike) which prevailed generally, included the Palais-Rochechouart, Marcadet and Tivoli, all units in the G. F. F. A. chain. On Saturday morning the management accepted the demands of the strikers, which included increased wages for all of the employees. They reopened that afternoon.

On the same day the seven newsreel theatres of the Cineac circuit were closed and remained so during the period of the strike. Here the major demand was for increased pay to ushers, who had been receiving $10 a week. Closed also on that day were the MGM first run house, the Olympia, and the Warner first run, the Apollo. Olympia ushers asked increased wages. Apollo ushers asked repeal of the rule whereby they had been charged for the privilege of working (strange as it may seem to American readers, ushers were paying $2 a week to work at the Apollo, in line with a Parisian custom whereby waiters and others in service depend for their livelihood upon tips from customers). American cinemas, the Olympia, Paramount, Rex, and all newsreel theatres, pay ushers and prohibit tipping.

Distribution Paralyzed

Distribution was hard hit by the strike. Companies were unable to get their films, negatives or prints, out of the developing plants and laboratories. Only one picture, a communist propaganda picture wanted for strikers' use, escaped the restrictions placed on withdrawal of films.

Delegates arrived at the G. F. F. A. exchange on Thursday and asked the staff to go on strike and occupy the premises. Most of them complied. Executives were allowed to go out and in but were not permitted to take anything with them. Swiftly the rounds of the distributors were made and ultimately the closing of exchanges was complete.

Distribution machinery remained paralyzed until the Minister of Labor finally brought the union delegates and employers, on the third day of his sessions with them, to a point of temporary agreement.

Closed Shop Chief Factor

Chief objection to the demands of the union delegates was expressed in connection with the requirement that employees must be selected from lists presented by the union exclusively. It was argued by employers that enforcement of this regulation would end all hope of the unemployed in the country of ever obtaining work and that it would perpetuate in employment those who had acceded to the C. T. G. overtures. Although wage increases in some cases ranged from 35 to 50 per cent of prevailing salaries, there was little opposition to this feature of the union demands.

40-Hour Week, Closed Shop, Higher Wages, Vacations With Pay Among Revisions Encompassed by Agreement

The extent to which the closed shop aspect of the agreement favors the strikers is not altogether clear at this writing. The agreement arrived at is described as "temporary" and there is general understanding that the term is equivalent to "experimental." A political situation likely to change at any time is regarded as responsible for this provision, an opinion bulwarked by the fact that an obscure codicil in the pact signed guarantees that there will not be sanctions against workers and political faiths will be respected.

RKO Reorganized By January—Spitz

Radio-Keith-Orpheum will be reorganized under section 77B of the Federal Bankruptcy Act by January, or sooner, Leo Spitz, president, told the company's sales convention, held last week in New York at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. The parent company today, he said, has upwards of $7,000,000 in the treasury as compared to a depleted exchequer three and a half years ago.

Mr. Spitz was elected a director of Metropolitan Playhouses last week to fill the post vacated by Herbert Bayard Swope. He will represent RKO's 20 per cent interest in the circuit. The annual financial report is expected to be completed by the auditors for ratification at the board's next meeting.

Loew's re-books "Henry VIII" for entire New York circuit!

This is the first time since the inception of this great theatre chain that it has ever re-booked any picture that had previously played its entire circuit.

Loew's, Inc., believes that the star value of CHARLES LAUGHTON, MERLE OBERON and ROBERT DONAT has a greater appeal for the American public today than it had when the picture was first released. That this is true was demonstrated two weeks ago when it played the Karlton Theatre, Philadelphia to several thousand dollars above the normal take of the house! And this in spite of sweltering heat!

Here is a picture that is more valuable right now than it ever was! If you're a smart showman you'll book it now and cash in on its outstanding box-office, star and entertainment appeal!

Public Enemy's Wife

(Warner)

Melodrama

A vein of suspense runs through this drama of gangsters, molls and G-men and the whole is topped off by a widely exciting climax. Rather episodic in technique, the story divides itself into about four chapters.

In the first, life term gangster Maroc promises to kill his wife, Judith, who has just completed a stretch, if she carries out her intent to divorce him. G-man Laird enters the picture to trail Judith and get information from her that will keep public enemy Maroc permanently behind the bars. The divorced Judith goes to Florida where she becomes infatuated with playboy McKay. Through a ruse, Maroc escapes, and when McKay hears about this and his threat he makes quick departure. But McKay, in typical G-man fashion, and also because he is romantically attracted to the girl, marries Judith. A squabbling honeymoon ensues, and Maroc, despite the attempts of police to cage him, attempts to kidnap his wife. In the climax, McKay summons his G-men to capture Maroc's mobsters. Excitement is intense prior to their rounding up, after which Judith decides to find happiness in her marriage to McKay.

Though drama dominates there is considerable comedy in the show. Its main appeal is to theatre-goers who like to see the G-men and gangsters in action.

We Went to College

(MGM)

College Comedy

When Hugh Herbert, Charles Butterworth, Una Merkel and Walter Catlett are in a cast, something really funny is to be expected. What turned up on the screen, in this case, was accepted as amusing comedy by some of the audience, other parts of it indicating the impression that the whole thing is absurd.

It's all about a bunch of middle aged grads returning to their college for a homecoming reunion. Herbert, full of the old college spirit, is typically funny in dialogue and action as a bull fiddle playing professor in charge of detail. Grouching brick manufacturer Walter Abel is forced into attending the reunion by perpetual youth Butterworth and the pleas of his wife, Edith Atwater, who wants him to be young again. As the fun of old-timers frolicing on the campus, football field, in frat houses and class rooms is illustrated, the yarn takes on a comedy romantic twist when Una Merkel, Herbert's wife, seeks to reignite the flame of college romance with Abel following the presentation of the graduating class Shakespearean play. On lovers' lake Miss Merkel manages to upset the canoe in which both are riding. Then she informs Miss Atwater that she and Abel are going to divorce their mates. Miss Atwater takes it straight, but the climax builds to a situation wherein under Herbert's and Butterworth's guidance, Miss Merkel explains away the episode.

Previewed in the Ritz theatre, Los Angeles, before an audience that contributed quite a few interpolations of its own.

Navy Born

(Republic)

Comedy Drama

A Navy picture, most of the male characters members of the service, this production makes consistent use of the fleet, an airplane carrier, a naval base and a naval flying squadron without presupposing a war or other national emergency. The story pertains to the personal lives of the officers, men and women, rather than to the Navy, and the distortion usually found necessary in pictures of the general kind is not present here. Exploitation may justifiably emphasize the service side of the production, with a liberal apportionment of attention to the baby element prominent in the narrative.

The story is of Lieut. Robert Furness, whose best friend and fellow officer arrives in port to find that his wife has died the night before after giving birth to a son. An automobile accident results in death of the father and Furness accepts from the dying man responsibility for the child and instruction to bring him up as a Navy man.

Bernice Farrington, the child's maiden aunt, seeks to gain custody of the child, but Furness and his fellow officers outwit her. She then attempts to fascinate Furness as a means of learning the baby's whereabouts and discovers, when she has done so and the baby has been taken to a hospital by her accomplice, that she has fallen in love with him and he with her.

At this point a gangster whose wife has left him attempts to regain custody of his child and abducts the disputed orphan by mistake, taking off to Canada in his own plane. Lieut. Furness pursues him in a naval plane, finally is joined by a squadron of the same, and the baby is reclaimed. The stress of circumstance has cleared up the situation for Furness and Miss Farrington, who decide to marry and raise the child according to parental wish.

A Star Fell From Heaven

(ABP)

Musical Comedy

This is musical in the right sense, or perhaps it should be said in the right place. The cast doesn't sing when it is supposed to be talking and that part of it which does sing is made up of known singers. Chiefly the melody comes from Joseph Schmidt, a tenor whose Continental reputation is well established.

Coupled with the music, and the sentimental attraction of a story in which the tenor is an unsuccessful lover, is humor of the most robust kind. It is chiefly in the form of a satire upon a film producer who uses long words in the wrong focus. The Snarling Tiger is the trademark of a film corporation which has the trading slogan: "If it's a good picture it's a Miracle."

Josef, a student of music, unsuccessfully tries to get a singing part in a film at the Miracle studios. Anne, daughter of his landlady, tries to assist him through her admirer Willi, who is actually a dresser but poses as the intimate of the great Fischer, head of Miracle. By accident, at the studio Anne meets Douglas Lincoln, singing star of the current Miracle production, and believes him to be Fischer. He encourages the mistake and promises to come and hear Josef sing at Anne's birthday party. His manager is accidentally present at the cafe in which the party is staged and, hearing Josef sing one of Lincoln's songs, believes his own star has been risking his voice.

As the result of a violent quarrel between manager and star, Lincoln loses his voice. Josef is persuaded to double vocally and so saves a hold-up in production. Anne, discovering Lincoln's real identity, tells Josef's fellow students that he has been robbed of the credit for the magnificent singing in the new film. They denounce Lincoln at the premiere, but he has already told the truth to the newspapers. Josef is famous, though he loses Anne to Lincoln.

The story details provide useful hints for exploitation. The angle of the artist listening while his own voice sings another man to greater fame is an obvious one. Without a danger of "giving away" too much a studio set, with mike and camera, could be used to make a very effective store show, reproducing one of the big scenes of the film. Schmidt, known as "the pocket tenor" because of his diminutive size, is a considerable star asset and good newspaper copy. George Graves, veteran British star of musical comedy, is not only a good name but does excellent work as Fischer.

It was a decided hit at the night trade show at the Piccadilly theatre, London. Many ranked it as the brightest effort of its kind yet seen from a British studio.

The Border Patrolman

(20th Century-Fox)

Romantic Drama

A well balanced picture, directed and played with a keen eye towards audience and exhibitor requirements, this comedy-tinged drama is pitched action. Production backgrounds and settings are of superior class. Generally the theme follows a modernized idea of the "Taming of the Shrew" premise. Up to date in motivation and action, dialogue is designed to create interest-holding situations.

Localed mainly in Mexican border desert country and an adjacent swanky pleasure resort, border patronman Wallace devotes much of his time to hauling spoiled wealthy girl Patricia Huntley up before the bar of justice for minor but potentially serious law infractions. As the girl customarily gets off with gentle reprimand, Wallace thinks cards are stacked against him and quits the service. Grandfather Huntley, in a quandary as to what to do with his problem child, is prevailed upon to give Wallace a job by Patricia,

Smugglers, headed by Maybrook, are in the background. This worthy, attracted to Patricia, finds Wallace a stumbling block to his ambitions toward her hand as well as to run contraband. In typical villain fashion, he acquaints Patricia with the real purposes her grandfather had in engaging Wallace. Falling for his line, Patricia gets herself into a position whereby she is to become an innocent accomplice of Maybrook. But Wallace senses the situation and, as the action is highlighted by several reckless auto chases across the desert and a couple of hectic melees, he frustrates Maybrook's plot and saves a now contrite Patricia from complicity in it. Finale is as expected.

Previewed in RKO Orpheum, downtown commercial house. Audience evidenced satisfaction with entertainment offered and was particularly appreciative of action material in finale.

Everything Is Rhythm

(Rock-ABFD)

Musical Comedy

To the musical appeal of dance and song numbers this adds a special exploitation value in that Harry Roy, starred with his band, recently got onto the front pages because of his marriage to "Princess Pearl," daughter of the white Rajah of Sarawak in Borneo. The story of the film is concerned with another capture of a princess by a dance band leader, and the heroine of the film is, in real life, Mrs. Harry Roy. There is material here for the showman, without any need of suggesting that the fact-film parallel is any closer than it is.

Just as screen fare it is tuneful, spirited, well relieved by humor and with some good dancing, both solo and ensemble. Some ingenious photography enables Roy and a chorus to be seen performing in miniature on top of a piano played by a soloist of normal size and adds to the humor of a finale in which the hero, the band and the girl get away by plane from the attempts of the ravaged court to restrain them by force.

The story: Harry Wade and his band, after a very rough patch, manage to wangle an engagement at the Hotel Regal. Harry, in love at sight with a beautiful girl, bribes a waiter to let him take his place and, through the medium of the morning coffee, he gets on with the courtship. The girl soon discovers the masquerade, and Wade in his turn discovers that the object of his admiration is the Princess Paula of Monrovia.

News of the princess' affaire is sent home by an officious lady-in-waiting and Paula is taken home by an equerry. Her last letter to Harry is destroyed by the lady-in-waiting and another substituted, breaking off the affair. Harry, broken hearted, takes the band on a world tour which ultimately brings them to Monrovia. The princess is unaware that her letter was destroyed and that later cables have not been dispatched. She issues orders for a command performance, and when Harry tears up the command he is rounded up by soldiers and marched to the palace.

Communication is reestablished between the lovers by a more accommodating lady-in-waiting and a rope of sheets lowered from the princess's room to the hero's place of confinement. When the outraged Monrovians, including the princess's official fiancé, go gunning for Wade they are checked by strains of music suggesting that he is obliging, as commanded, but actually the music is coming from a gramophone and Wade, princess and band are on their way by plane, singing as they go.

There are nine song numbers.

The Interrupted Honeymoon

(British Lion, London)

Farce

Here is a picture which must be sold for what it is, a very deft screen adaptation—development would be a better word—of a stage farce essentially British in its atmosphere and speech, yet rich with humorous situations of a kind which frequently scarcely needs dialogue for its appreciation. In those places where there is a specialized appreciation of Claude Hulbert or for the type of dude-simpleton he specializes in—Claude Allister is the nearest parallel—it will be a very well appreciated feature.

The plot values are considerable and nonsensical in the cleverest way. By way of a highlight, and offering a definite exploitation angle, is an involuntary plane flight by the hero and the man who wants to kill him, which offers comedy blended with sensationalism in the deftest way. Crossing the Channel from Paris to England, that plane loops, skims cliffs and finally crashes after the occupants have made a descent by parachute, biting ears mutually in efforts to get sole control of the means of escape. It's a big laugh.

It's a story of a simpleton who, on the eve of his wedding, gets into a drunken spree and has to give a similarly involved friend the use of his flat while he and his bride are on honeymoon in Paris. Then he innocently excites the jealousy of the French hotel-keeper, and to escape the latter's desire for a duel, tries to get away to London, to which his bride already has returned in anger. Ensues the plane episode, followed by further trouble for the bridebroom because the temporary occupant of his flat has had to give shelter to a lady friend of his rich uncle, in order to cover up the indiscretions of the latter. What with the duel-conscious Frenchman, the cross-mixture of sweeties and wives and so forth, there is plenty of fine confused comedy before the end.

Where the material isn't too British to be understood, there is plenty of entertainment material to sell. Hulbert, in his vein, is brilliant and is well supported.—ALLAN, London.

Nut Guilty

(Vitaphone)

Fair

A take-off on the practice of city officials to turn over, for a day, the control of the city, to boys. The boys are far from being civic minded, preferring spitball battles to politics. Among the boys is one "Charlie McCarthy," a dummy, who assists the judge (Edgar Bergen) on the bench. Charlie gets himself into hot water over a divorce case involving a gangster. When the gangster threatens to shoot Charlie the other one-day officials come to his rescue, disrupting the court's routine with inkballs. Running time, 10 minutes.

The Wife of the Party

(Vitaphone)

Comedy

Comedy as practiced by Ken Murray with the aid of "Sassafras" is the principal attraction in this short. The story revolves around Murray, his wife and their boss. The boss, unaware that Murray and his stenographer are married, makes a date with the stenographer. Events follow the usual trend along comedy lines with the denouement occurring at the Murray's apartment, where a birthday party for the boss is in progress, when "Sassafras" gives Murray away. Supporting players are George Watts, Peggy O'Donnell, Jeanne Kelly and Don MacBride. Running time, 22 minutes.

"FROZEN MONEY" PROBLEM IS STIFLING INDUSTRY IN SPAIN

Consortium Urged as Method of Liquidating Stored Up Dollar Credits; Chrysler Company to Head New Project

by HARRY CHAPIN PLUMMER
in Barcelona

With the Centro Oficial de Concatración de Moneda, the Exchange Control Committee of Spain, undergoing reorganization as to its personnel, American interests in this country, and particularly the film distributor Spanish affiliates, are fast approaching a crisis in their fiscal and commercial operations throughout the republic. Vast totals of monies are "frozen" by the inability of the actually solvent Spanish Government to provide dollars against the holdings of those interests in pesetas.

It has just been learned that the Sociedad Espanola Importadora de Automoviles, known as the SEIDA, with headquarters in Madrid and branches in Barcelona and the major cities, and which is the unit representation in this country of the Chrysler Motor Company, is seeking permission from the Government here to take over large stocks of pottery, Mallorca ware and other merchandise accumulated in factories and warehouses in lieu of pesetas and to convert those stocks into dollars by importation to and sale in the United States. In this way the sums in pesetas covered by serial applications for dollar export permits, some of them of as much as fifteen months' standing, eventually may be released to the Seida on behalf of the Chrysler interests. The Seida, it already has been officially announced, is soon to establish a large factory at either Bilboa or Barcelona for assembling operations on a basis of 60% domestic material and parts to 40% of American motors, patents and accessories and with all but the director and technical staff to be composed of Spaniards.

Based on Precedent

The Seida is understood to be basing its action in respect to merchandise financing and export upon the precedent already established by the Compania Nacional Telefónica de Espana, which has in part liquidated its long overdue accounts to the International Telephone & Telegraph Company of New York, credited with a total of more than 200,000,000 pesetas. The Spanish telephone unit has been able to arrange Governmental permission for the exportation of a large volume of olive oil of grades employed only for industrial purposes and by that means to liquidate at least a percentage of its "frozen" accounts to its American creditor principal.

American motion-picture, motor, radio and electrical interests here are closely following the operations of the telephone company and the Seida. The conviction already is gaining ground that the ultimate solution of the peseta-dollar conversion problam will be found in the establishment of a giant consortium in which all of the American industrial and commercial factors will have representation and eventually a proportionate share in the sale and export to America of vast stocks of readily salable merchandise held here and available in pesetas at absolutely minimum price levels. Much of these stocks could take the place of regular cash purchases in other European countries, such as Great Britain, Germany, Switzerland, Czechoslovakia and Belgium, by the buyers for major American department stores, mail order houses and other wholesale importers.

Such a consortium would be capable not only of inducing the Spanish Government to grant the necessary permission for them to adjust their peseta-dollar conversion requirements in this manner, but of prevailing upon the United States Government to withhold application of the anti-dumping law against these specific operations, since they would be undertaken for an object apart from that of mere merchandising and underselling.

Antonio B. Caragol, of this city, who for the last thirty years has been exclusively engaged in business between Spain and the United States, when asked by the Motion Picture Herald correspondent as to the possibility of the success of such a consortium, which is looked upon favorably by most of the American film distributing representations here, gave it as his opinion that the Spanish government in all probability would prefer to work with a general fiscal unit representative of all American industrial and commercial groups having monies tied up in Spain rather than with individual buying movements instituted by separate entities.

Mr. Caragol was for ten years national counselor in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States representing the American Chamber of Commerce in Spain, of which he is an active member now and, during the world war, was honorary commercial attaché of the Spanish Embassy to the United States and an officer and director of the Spanish Chamber of Commerce in New York from its founding. He declared that Germany, France and England, the principal competitors of the United States in manufactured goods, had perfected arrangements for their payments and are regularly importing merchandise into this country in normal fashion. Therefore, the inability of the American exporters to longer supply this trade because of the lapse of fifteen months or more between applications for dollar withdrawal permits and their granting by the Centro Oficial de Concatración, is causing them to fast lose this once valuable market to their European competitors.

Problem is Complex

"While American motion-picture films, as a quality product, enjoy a distinct advantage over general merchandise, the problem of the conversion of the huge sums in pesetas held by the distributors is not the less one which is increasing in complexity and gravity from day to day," said Mr. Caragol. "The creation of a central consortium embracing all the American import interests here, but centered for organization purposes in the United States, and working as both an advisory and a cooperative factor with both the Spanish and the American governments, I believe would eventually succeed in dislodging a large proportion of the 'frozen' peseta accounts here.

Government, Though Solvent, Unable to Provide Dollars for Exchange; Accounts Are Fifteen Months in Arrears

"All the Spanish governments that have been in power since these arrears commenced have manifested an urgent desire to find a solution and the present administration is actively striving to adjust it. Unfortunately the solution will be difficult to find so long as the deficit in Spain's international trade has to be taken care of in money.

"With a consortium representing the American creditors of these many Spanish affiliate organizations and those independent importers brought into being and operation, it surely would receive the fullest cooperation from the individual Spanish debtors, who at no time have sought and do not now seek long-time credits, but who only are prevented by the lack of dollar balances in Spain from remitting their obligations. The American and Spanish governments might both be invited to have unofficial representatives in such a consortium and the American Chamber of Commerce in Spain invited to formally participate in its deliberations."

Racing to London are two competitive bidders for the contract of distribution representation in Spain for Republic Pictures. No sooner had Jose María Sala, general manager of Atlantic Films, this city, sped to the British capital with an offer, than a group of capitalists closely affiliated with the Trasportes Internationales Bertrand, of France, and headed by Bertrand, cabled ahead that they were en route by air with a proposition to accept delivery of Republic films in Spain payable in French francs in France. It appears that the operations of the Bertrand organization throughout Spain are so comprehensive that they would have no difficulty in exchanging their peseta holdings gained from film sales here for merchandise or other accounts.

Half a hundred delegates will gather for the annual convention of Hispano Foxfilm, S. A. E., at the Hotel Palace, Madrid, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 24, 25 and 26, Sydney S. Horen, general manager, announced here today. Not only will Spain proper and the Canary and Belearic Isles and España en Marruecos be represented, but Portugal will have a delegate in the person of H. Levy, manager of operations within that republic, who will come from Lisbon for the big assemblage.

Benjamin Miggins, the newly appointed European general manager of Twentieth Century-Fox, has promised to attend if he possibly can do so. Another executive to be present will be Russell Muth, editor of Fox News in Europe.

Beginning the day following the close of the convention, Fox will trade show new productions simultaneously in Madrid, Barcelona, Valencia, Alicante, Sevilla, Bilbao and Coruña. It will be the first time that the Fox Spanish organization has had a trade showing of such magnitude in this country.

Julio Elías, who until the present has distributed Educational Pictures in Spain, will be present at the convention, inasmuch as henceforth the distribution of Educational Pictures will be conducted by Hispaño Foxfilm, according to the contract lately concluded between Twentieth Century-Fox and Educational Pictures and Hispaño Foxfilm and Señor Elías, as already reported in Motion Picture Herald.

Encouraged by the phenomenally wide public response to the first run showing of "Rebelión Abordo" (Mutiny on the Bounty), now about to enter upon its fifth week here at a sharply advanced price scale, the distributing unit, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Iberica, S.A.E., believes there is an unexploited field in this city for quality offerings at a consistently maintained admission scale and it has embarked upon a radical departure in policy of distribution. Already two of the leading cinema theatres of Barcelona—the Fémina, home of the current "Mutiny" first-run, and the Kursaal, foremost in subsequent run theatres—have contracted with the Metro organization under the new principle.

The Volga, another of the first subsequent runs and enjoying a strategic location ideal for the trying out of the new policy, and the downtown Principal Palace, Barcelona's most famed of historic "legit" theatres, are expected to do likewise, and, in turn, to lend encouragement to many other houses of lesser category to follow suit. Protection, in the form of restriction of the film offerings to current showings at the contracting theatre, is an added inducement to the impresario.

Fewer Films Is Objective

The primary objective of the new principle is reduction in the number of film takings over a given period, the raising of the price-scale and the carrying of a single film over a considerably longer period than that prevailing, which now is one week, at the most, and sometimes a half-week. Instead of three films on one program, changed weekly or twice a week, it is planned to develop a run of from two to three weeks or, even, longer, for one picture at increased admission prices.

The plan is not without precedent in Spain, for in the capital city, Madrid, which, although totaling slightly less than Barcelona's million, one hundred thousand, has but seventy cinema's against this city's 117, changes of bill are much less frequent and the admission scale is much higher. Here the range is the lowest in the republic and is equalled in that respect by few major centres in the world. At the Bilbao Theatre in Madrid a single picture will run from 12 to 14 weeks uninterruptedly.

The plethora of cinemas in Barcelona is not really a film condition; it is a real estate "racket." With the slowing-up of apartment house and store construction, several years ago, building operators turned to garages, encouraged by the inordinate increase in motor-car ownership and driving throughout the city and its beautiful environs. But, in an evil hour, an owner of a vacant lot discovered that, whereas the most that might be expected in lease figures from a garage would be 25,000 pesetas, per annum, for a cinema from 40,000 to 50,000 pesetas would be the prevailing figure. The result, a feverish race in film theatre building, and a scramble of unqualified and inexperienced "impresarios" to open a cinema upon literally a "shoe-string" of credit—and hopes.

These were added to an already overcrowded theatre market of "shooting-galleries" and mouldy, dilapidated theatres of the burlesque type, corresponding to the old Third Avenue, in New York, Havlin's on Wabash Avenue, Chicago, and the Bowdoin Square in Boston. It is the frankly expressed hope of the proponents of the new plan to "asphyxiate" a class of cinema theatre in Barcelona which provides three feature pictures, a travel descriptive, a Mickey Mouse, a Pop-Eye and, not infrequently, a stale news-reel thrown in for good measure.

Protection Given

The measure of protection to be afforded the higher grade subsequent run houses accepting the plan will be the withholding of the particular offering from any other theatre for a reasonable period following the showing under the new contract and the absolute prevention of any competition with the same picture during the contracted period. In other words, a house undertaking to put the principle into effect will be assured virtually the same safeguards with which the absolute first-run houses, some of them distributor-controlled, surround themselves for such a picture as "Mutiny," "The Milky Way," "Top Hat," "The Littlest Rebel," "Modern Times," "Love Me Forever," "Midsummer Night's Dream," etc. —the lapse of an appreciable interval before re-showing in houses of lesser rank and price-scale.

Under the contract for the new plan, the Fémina, will inaugurate its coming season with a minimum of 4.40 pesetas (40 centimos representing the Municipal tax of the City of Barcelona), with advance in admissions proportioned to the quality and importance of outstanding offerings, such as "The Great Ziegfeld" and "Romeo and Juliet," among the season's exclusive Metro program. The Kursaal will advance its scale from the present 1 peseta and 1.50 pesetas to 1.50-2 pesetas.

Itemization

Herman Bing, he of the Weber-and-Field's accent, was "accused" by the cinema critic of "La Rambla," a leading Barcelona evening paper, of "larceny," following the premiere at the Coliseum here, this week, of "En los Tiempos del Vals," the Ramon Navarro-Evelyn Laye picture. "Among the best of the film were the artists in secondary roles" wrote the reviewer, naming Una Merkel, Edward Everett Horton and Charles Butterworth, "and a servant of whose name we are not aware, but who, with his impassive countenance and versatility of vocal nuance threatened the rest of the cast." Which, in the Catalan tongue, the language of "La Rambla" means that Herman "stole the show."

Artistas Asociados' (United Artists) prospectus for the coming season in Spain leads off with no less an array of film opulence than the H. G. Wells (London Film) picture, "Things to Come;" "Dark Angel;" "Strike Me Pink," with Eddie Cantor; "Little Lord Fauntleroy;" "The Amateur Gentleman," "The Ghost Goes West," "Splendor," the re-titled "These Three" and the second-run of "Modern Times."

A. F. Lomba, assistant manager of Hispano Foxfilm, S. A. E., whose transfer from the headquarters of that unit in this city became known last week, has just been assigned to the Paris Twentieth Century-Fox executive staff.

For the second time the attempt of the insurgent group of the Asociatión de Empresarios de Espectaculos de Catalunya, the exhibitors' organization of this city and region, to return a vote of censure against Enrique Sáenz, the president, for his allegedly passive attitude in the Jacques Edelstein-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Iberica controversy and to force his resignation, met with defeat the last meeting. When the result became known to the Cámara Española de Cinematografía, it was stated that work would at once be prosecuted upon the new pact to be entered upon between the two organizations, as already forecast in Motion Picture Herald.

"Inadmissible" was the term by which the newly seated Governor General of Andalucía characterized the demands of the employes of the cinemas, legitimate theatres, bull-rings, sports charging admissions and all public spectacles now in the three weeks of their strike by which all amusement places in the capital city, Sevilla, and many other centers of the region have been closed, following his consultation with the Secretary of the Council of Labor, arrived from Madrid. The strikers, however, were buoyed by the manifestations of certain of the Councillors of the Municipality of Sevilla that the cinema employees would be encouraged to open their own cinemas in tents on city-owned and maintained property and exempted from the license fees ordinarily exacted in advance from regularly established film theatres. The owners and managers of the latter expected that the position taken by the Governor General would determine the end of the strike, as a matter of principle. The summer season is already under way in the Andalusian metropolis and the strike fortunately developed on the eve of the usual closing. The strike has been settled in a manner considered satisfactory to the theatre owners.

"Clemencia," the Mexico-filmed Radio picture featuring Consuelito Frank and Julián Soler, companioned with the re-shown dubbed "Alegre Divorciada" (Gay Divorcée), seized the enviable holiday dates of Pentecost Sunday and Monday and, of course, the rest of the week, at the Catalunya, a house strategically ideal for distributor and exhibitor.

The Catalunya is now the established theatre here for Spanish-language pictures, both national and foreign, but principally national, although a Fox single offering in English or double-bill in both languages is an occasional exception.

OVER 200 PLAYERS TEE OFF IN ANNUAL FILM GOLF TOURNEY

AMPA Team of Einfeld, Fecke, Gerety and Palumbo Captures Albee Memorial Trophy and Film Daily Medals

Exhibitors, producers and executives of the motion picture in the east went to work with more industry than skill in a day of festival, fun and, incidentally golf, at the 24th Film Daily golf tournament on Wednesday at the Glen Oaks Golf and Country Club, Great Neck, Long Island.

Cloudy skies and chilly air failed to cast any gloom over the spirits of the 200 who included plenty of duffers, some pluggers and mighty few experts. The day began with a farm breakfast at which John W. Alicoate, Film Daily publisher, was host and was climaxed with the revival of the tired club swingers at a dinner and festal evening in the clubhouse.

Prizes and souvenirs donated for the competition were plentiful enough to insure awards even for the players who are still trying to blast their way out of the sand traps around the first hole. They included sets of three Top Flite golf balls donated by Joe Hornstein and decks of bridge cards donated by Dupont Films, given to each registrant. All players also received sun visors from United Artists.

The crowd at the banquet, which concluded the day, was increased by many non-playing film lights. Those who had rested all day received no handicap, however, from the players in the food and drink department.

Tournament prizes awarded after the banquet were as follows:

THE HOLLYWOOD SCENE

Quick reference information on product started and completed and a panorama of the news of the week

Production

The mid-June week saw Hollywood start 12 pictures. In the same period seven completed. Comedies, dramas and musicals are included. The one that looks most ambitious is Republic's "Follow Your Heart." One of the most expensive productions the company has undertaken, it is anticipated that its release will be one of the first steps in the organization's drive for major recognition. Marion Talley, operatic singer, will make her screen debut. The supporting cast includes Michael Bartlett, Alison Skipworth, Margaret Irving, Ben Blue, Mickey Rentschler, Eunie Healy and Nigel Bruce. There will be hundreds of extras. Aubrey Scotto is directing.

Two pictures started at Radio. "Count Pete," which Joseph Santley is directing, will present Ann Southern, Gene Raymond, Henry Stephenson, George Meeker, Anita Colby, Gordon Jones, Maxine Jennings and George Beranger. In "Grand Jury" John Arledge, Harry Jones, Louise Latimer, Fred Stone, Owen Davis, Jr., and Frank M. Thomas will be seen. Albert Rogell is directing.

Paramount is also credited with two of the starting productions. "With Banners Blowing" will feature Gladys George, Arline Judge, Dudley Digges, Isabel Jewel, Harry Carey, William Collier, Sr., John Wray and George Hayes. Wesley Ruggles is directing. The second picture is "I Give My Life," first of the Richard A. Rowland productions for Paramount release. The cast includes Guy Standing, Frances Drake, Tom Brown, Jeanett Beecher, Robert Gleckler, Helen Lowell, Charles C. Wilson, Charles Richman, Franklin Parker, James Eagles and Corbett Morris. Edwin L. Marin will direct.

On location at Catalina Island, Warner started "Three in Eden." As Frank McDonald directs, Margaret Lindsay, Ian Hunter and Gordon Hart are featured.

Twentieth Century-Fox began work on "Across the Aisle." The cast currently includes Brian Donlevy, Gloria Stuart, Isabel Jewel and Romaine Callender. Eugene Ford is directing.

MGM started "The Devil Is a Sissy." Freddie Bartholomew is starred with Jackie Cooper, Mickey Rooney, Dorothy Peterson, Shirley Ross, Mary Doran, Etienne Girardot, Gene Lockhart, Kathleen Lockhart and Jonathan Hale. Rowland Brown is directing. While starting this picture, MGM also put "Suzy" back in the work for retakes.

At Columbia "Adventures in Manhattan" started. Joel McCrea, Jean Arthur, Thomas Mitchell, Charles C. Wilson and John Gallaudet are the principals. Edward Ludwig is directing.

Universal's new work is "Yellowstone." Presently the cast lists Henry Hunter, Judith Barrett, Ralph Morgan, Andy Devine and Paul Hervey. Important additions will be made. Direction is by Arthur Lubin.

"Wings Over San Antonio" was started by National Pictures. The cast is composed of Lloyd Hughes, Rosalind Keith, William Janney, Jason Robarts, George Regas, Richard Cramer, Russell Hicks, Glen Boles, Henry Otho, John Eberts, Rosa Purich, Frank Hagney and Loretta King. Stuart Paton is directing.

Completing the list of new productions, Chesterfield started "Lady Luck." It will present Patricia Farr, William Bakewell, Lulu McConnell, Duncan Renaldo, Jamison Thomas, Arthur Hoyt, Iris Adrian, Vivian Oakland, Lew Kelly, Charles Lane and Claude Allister.

Three pictures were wiped off the production schedule by 20th Century-Fox. "The Bowery Princess," which stars Shirley Temple, also presents Frank Morgan, Helen Westley, Robert Kent, Delma Byron, Astrid Allwyn, Berton Churchill, Stepin Fetchit, Paul Stanton, Julius Tannen, John Carradine, Herman Bing, Arthur Aylesworth, Greta Meyer and the Hall Johnson Choir. William A. Seiter directed. The second picture, "Charlie Chan at the Race Track," again teams Warner Oland and Keye Luke supported by Helen Wood, Thomas Beck, Alan Dinehart, Gloria Roy, Jonathan Hale, Gavin Muir, G. P. Huntley, Jr., George Irving and Frankie Darro. H. Bruce Humberstone directed. In "Girl's Dormitory," Herbert Marshall, Ruth Chatterton and Simone Simon are starred supported by Dixie Dunbar, J. Edward Bromberg, John Qualen, Constance Collier.

Two pictures were completed at Warner. "Cain and Mable" features Marion Davies with Clark Gable and includes Roscoe Karns, David Carlyle, Walter Catlett, Hobart Cavanaugh, William Collier, Sr., Allen Jenkins, Ruth Donnelly, E. E. Clive, Pert Kelton, Eily Malyon and Robert Middlemass. Lloyd Bacon directed. "China Clipper" also finished. Pat O'Brien, Beverly Roberts and Ross Alexander are featured, supported by Humphrey Bogart, Marie Wilson, the late Henry B. Walthall, Ruth Robinson, Addison Richards, Joseph Crehan, Alexander Cross, Kenneth Harlan and Joseph King. Raymond Enright directed.

MGM finished "Sworn Enemy." The cast lists Robert Young, Florence Rice, Joseph Calleia, Lewis Stone, Nat Pendleton, Harold Huber, Harvey Stephens, Samuel Hinds, Robert Gleckler, Mahlon Hamilton, Lillian Harmey, Norman Ainsley, Duke York and George Chandler. Edwin L. Marin directed.

"Gentleman from Louisiana" was finished at Republic. Principal players are Eddie Quillan, Chic Sale, Charlette Henry, Marjorie Gateson and John Miljan. Others listed include Pierre Wotkin, Charles Wilson, Ruth Gillette, Holmes Herbert, Matt McHugh, John Kelly, Snob Pollard, Gertrude Hoffman and Kenneth Lawton. Irving Pichel directed.

Overseas Opinion

No matter how good British motion pictures may become—and in his opinion they are developing with remarkable strides—the lopsided advantage of American product continues to more than keep pace with them in audience favor in Great Britain. So thinks Murray Silverstone, chairman of British United Artists, here in Hollywood to confer with Samuel Goldwyn, John Hay Whitney, David O. Selznick, Jesse Lasky, Mary Pickford, Douglas Fairbanks and other U. A. producers on production plans for the coming year.

"American pictures account for 75 per cent of the movie market in the British Isles," says Silverstone. "Grosses are continually mounting and there seems to be no satiation point. Improvement of British-made pictures has resulted in a keener appreciation of good film entertainment. Yet American stars still hold sway in the affections of theatregoers."

Naturally, Silverstone pointed out, the British respond enthusiastically to domestically made productions when they are especially fine, demonstrating that appreciation with large attendances. Such appreciation was particularly true in the case of Alexander Korda's "The Ghost Goes West."

On the other hand, strictly American contemporaries of "The Ghost," such as "Strike Me Pink," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Top Hat" and "Little Lord Fauntleroy," checked in box-office business that was heart-warming to exhibitors.

Present favorite stars with the British public are Charlie Chaplin, who is tops by a great margin, Marlene Dietrich, Norma Shearer, Eddie Cantor, Greta Garbo and Shirley Temple. The order of their popularity fluctuates in the order that they hold the five places, but Chaplin continues to remain first.

Essay

> WANTED—Photographers. Must have the patience of Job, nerve of a burglar, artistry of Michael Angelo, tenacity of a bulldog, tact and diplomacy of Richelieu, skill of a surgeon, disposition of a saint and agility of an acrobat. Must be healthy, strong, not afraid of long hours and willing to take chances. Apply to any Hollywood studio.

If a photographer is skillful with a still camera, the pay is pretty good. Lots of interesting people will be met and dull moments in life will be few and far between. But anyone who is thinking of applying should have his mind made up to be a patsy, a fall guy. Usually accomplishments will be unhonored. Quite frequently they'll go unsung.

The "still" cameramen are the boys who make the interesting photographs of scenes from productions seen in magazine pages. Also they are the ones charged with the responsibility of getting those telling photos that are the basis for lobby displays. They are the fellows whose one job it is to get the picture that's worth a thousand words.

They should be the most popular and sought after members of a production crew. But in about nine cases out of 10 they are anything but that. Considered pests, they lead the life of an outcast, a pariah, a nuisance. Always they're between the devil and the deep blue sea. The publicity director, in answer to request for certain shots, jumps on the still men if they return without satisfactory material. Directors and stars leap all over them every time they ask for a moment to get a picture they are paid to get. Directors object because they think the still man is holding up production; players object because they want to get out from under the hot lights; other technical crew members yell because they're holding up set-up changes. That explains the necessity for tact and diplomacy. Alibis, particularly the old standby, "I couldn't get the guys to hold still long enough," aren't worth a nickel.

Much has been written about the courage and resourcefulness of the motion picture camera man. He's been heroized in many ways. But none of the public and only a few of the exhibitors who admire the work of the still cameraman have any idea of his problems. Through the use of a wide assortment of lenses, the movie cameraman can almost choose the distances from which he desires to shoot a

WHAT'S GOVERNMENT?

REPLY TO AN EDITORIAL AND AN EDITORIAL REPLY

To the Editor of the Herald:

I am amused and rather surprised at an article of yours in the May 30th edition called "In the Raw." I thank you for its publication, because if you had not written it, I would probably never have known of its existence. I am contacting the government department to obtain a booking on it in my theatre, since a large share of my audience would rather see a 28-minute short on land erosion than many of the sophisticated productions of Hollywood. Your article writes of the government as some strange person on the street. We have been taught in our schools in the west that we are the government and to talk about it in the first person, but you seem to think it is the third person. I wonder what would happen if the government should hire theatres and halls to run these pictures in, if you and your publication would not be the first one to raise objections.

I admire the attack by Arthur Hays Sulzberger, publisher of the New York Times, for going after the motion picture industry for their indifference towards government operations. You may represent the sentiment of many of the de luxe houses in the east, but we folks out in the sticks and small towns are not satisfied with what Will Hays and his organization is dishing out to us.—H. O. Ekern, Rex Theatre, Thompson Falls, Mont.

Following is the reply of Terry Ramsaye to Mr. Ekern:

Your letter of June 11th, discussing my editorial in the May 30, 1936, issue of Motion Picture Herald, entitled "In the Raw," is an interesting reaction indicating that you are well pleased with the Administration. We are always very glad to have such frank expressions from our readers, and particularly those which have a point of view concerning the industry.

You and I do not, of course, see exactly eye to eye with respect to some of the manifestations of what we call the government. Personally, I would rather not see the government engaged in or impinging upon any business. I very gravely doubt the competency of the management which is elected by a majority, which inevitably is not a party at interest in the conduct of business. I even doubt that you would like to have the management of your theatre taken over by the citizenry of your town as a committee of the whole on operations, and I hope you will not consider it flattery when I say that I am sure that Mr. H. O. Ekern can do a better job of running the Rex Theatre than the voters of Thompson Falls, Mont.

You say that we have been taught in our schools in the west that we are the government. That is another indictment of our educational system. But, if we are the government, it is mine and I can criticize it as freely as anything else which pertains to me.

You say you admire the attack by Arthur Hays Sulzberger, publisher of the New York Times, for going after the motion picture industry for its indifference towards government operations. Mr. Sulzberger did not make the attack. It was the editor of his Motion Picture Department.

Speaking of your enthusiasm for a "28-minute short on land erosion," did you observe how some rather western persons from the Panhandle section of the State of Texas objected to the dust belt reference? You see even your own West is not precisely unanimous.

Additional $140,000 In Fees to GTE Lawyers

The petition of United States Senator Daniel O. Hastings of Delaware as receiver for General Theatres Equipment, Inc., for an allowance of additional legal fees totaling $140,000 was granted by Chancellor Josiah O. Wolcott in Chancery court in Wilmington last week. No opposition was voiced.

The additional allowances include: $62,500 for Mr. Hastings as receiver and $77,500 for the law firms of Marvel, Ward and Logan, of Wilmington, and Hughes, Schurman and Dwight, of New York, who served the receiver during four years of the receivership.

Mr. Hastings already has received $62,500 as receiver and the two law firms an aggregate of $80,000. The additional allowance also includes a $35,000 contingent fee for services in the case involving the receiver and All-Continent Corporation.

The allowance also provided for payment of $1,195.09 to Hughes, Schurman and Dwight for disbursements made in the interest of the receivership estate.

Federal Admission Tax Shows Increase for May

Federal admission taxes for May showed an increase over April but were slightly less than for May, 1935, according to the Bureau of Internal Revenue in Washington. Receipts during the month were $1,318,763, against $1,266,423 in April and $1,343,876 in May, 1935.

In the Broadway district of New York tax collections including taxes on season tickets, totalled $425,701. Total collections in the third New York district for the month were $482,592.

Dietrich Appeal Filed

A brief contending that Marlene Dietrich's residence in California entitles her to the benefits of the state property laws for income tax purposes has been filed by attorneys for the actress with the Board of Tax Appeals in Washington. Deficiencies of $52,562 are claimed against the star by the government on her 1933 income which the Treasury claims, was $187,469.

$600,000 Fees Sought

With completion of the reorganization of Allied Owners Corporation, theatre and realty owners, in federal court, at Brooklyn, this week, trustees and other factors in the transaction sought fees amounting to $600,000.

Still Man's Part in "HollywoodScene"

scene. Everyone from director and star all the way down the line is cooperating. But the still man has only one lens, when he's making production shots, usually a wide angle one that necessitates being up quite close to the action. If the movie camera man misses, they do it all over again. Nobody ever heard of a scene being re-shot because the still man missed.

The daily routine of any still cameraman would make a fitting subject for a thrill action picture. Any one of them, Whitey Schaefer, Ray Jones and Irving Lippman of Columbia, Johnnie Miehle and Fred Henderson at Radio, Don English and Ken Lobben at Paramount, Vergil Apger and Bill Grimes at MGM or Scotty Welbourne and Elmer Fryer at Warners, or any of the other members of the brave crews in all the studios, have undergone perils and experiences that would make the most hazardous trumped-up heroics of heroes and heroines look as exciting as a May party. They've defied genius directors, cajoled temperamental stars, come to grips with productions managers who can think of no one's interest but their own. They've been blown up in explosions, ridden avalanches, half drowned in rivers and oceans, come down in crashing planes, stood in front of thundering herds without benefit of process shots and undergone no end of breakneck dangers.

Artists not of the smock and beret category—the only incentive they have to do a good job is the knowledge that in order to stick on the payroll they'll have to surmount a different set of handicaps in each successive production.

Upturn

A survey of the theatre situation in the southland reveals a healthy spurt of activity in the past six months. This locality, which was extravagantly over-seated some years ago, has had numbers of theatres dark for long periods of time and building of theatres has been practically at a standstill. That the entertainment business is definitely on a vigorous uptrend in this locality is indicated by the reopening of 17 houses and the construction of 10.

Among houses reopened during the last six months are the beautiful Carthay Circle, which returns to the first-run field with the extended run of "The Great Ziegfeld"; the Alpine, reopened by A. Sandow; the Filmarte, reopened by Fox West Coast, which plans to turn the lights on in the Airdome at El Centro and the Fox Court in San Bernardino during the summer; the Florence Mills, owned by E. C. O'Keefe; J. B. Sloate's Maynard; the Keystone, operated by Eastland Theatres, Inc.; the Garden in Belvedere Gardens, operated by Hershon and Spaeth; W. G. Loudermilk's Magna in Superior, Ariz.; Joe Beccheti's Clarkdale in Clarkdale, Ariz.

Charles Alden, in connection with Fox West Coast, has the doors open at the Globe in Globe, Ariz. Other theatres recently returned from the darkness are L. F. Long's Rex theatre in Hayden, Ariz.; E. V. Tracy's Capitol in Long Beach; Frank Ullman's Tacumba in Tacumba; and Monrovia, operated by Feldstein and Dietrich in Monrovia. The Apache in Phoenix, Ariz., has been entirely remodeled and redecorated by Nick Diamas for reopening.

Newly constructed theatres include W. G. Loudermilk's Roxy in Buckeye, Ariz.; the Holbrook in Holbrook, Ariz., built by Harry Nace and Ray Olmstead, who also have brand new houses in McNary and St. Johns, Ariz. Fox West Coast has the Tower in Compton, Cal. David Cantor has the Park in Los Angeles.

Yours for the Asking

(Paramount)

Comedy Romance

In this story George Raft is the suave owner of a luxurious gambling house. He has ambitions to improve his social status. Dolores Costello Barrymore, last in "Fauntleroy," is a financially embarrassed Park Avenue socialite who becomes his partner. As Richard (Skeets) Gallagher continually hovers about, James Gleason, Edgar Kennedy and Lynne Overman are three wise guy employees of Raft's whose only objective is to keep their boss' mind strictly on business. Reginald Owen and Ida Lupino, now in "One Rainy Afternoon," are a pair of masquerading English sharpshooters intent upon separating Raft from as much money as they possibly can. That's the setup that causes Raft to fall in love with Miss Lupino, become a dupe for Owens' faked antique sales and finally, after he has undergone a hectic round of experiences, discover that Miss Costello is the kind of girl he'd like to marry.

Localed in Miami during the winter season, the production moves through swanky hotels, sun-drenched beaches, gaudy gambling houses and other glamorous entertainment places of the gay resort. Settings are rich and lavish. Situations call for some intriguing interludes and dialogue is modern and peppy as the smart fall guy tries to hold his own against the machinations of two girls.

The film is based on a story by William R. Lipman and William H. Wright for which the screen play was prepared by Eve Greene, Harlan Ware and Phillip MacDonald. It is being directed by Alexander Hall.

While major action centers around the players mentioned, players who will be seen in character parts include Robert Gleckler, Walter Walker and Richard Powell.

The Gentleman from Louisiana

(Republic)

Drama

Though the title of this might suggest something of an historical nature, the picture, while adopting that vein in a semi-topical way, actually is a drama with a horse racing background. Yet its time is of the period when such figures as Lillian Russell, Diamond Jim Brady, John L. Sullivan and Steve Brody made the headlines.

Probably more important to showmen than class of story or character of production that it is being given is the fact that it will present Eddie Quillan in the star role. In making this cast selection, Republic officials acknowledges that they were influenced in their decision by the growing demand, frequently expressed by exhibitors in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, to see Quillan more often on the screen.

The story has Quillan as a jockey and Chic Sale as an owner trainer who possesses the secret of making broken-down plugs win races from highly touted favorites. Taken under the sponsorship of Marjorie Gateson, wealthy patron of the turf, Quillan falls in love with her daughter, Charlotte Henry. When evil days fall upon Miss Gateson, Quillan sells his services to John Miljan, an aristicratic but unscrupulous track devotee. To aid Gateson and Miss Henry in recouping their fortunes Quillan "throws" a race. Miljan causes his disbarment from the track, but through the influence of Diamond Jim (Charles Wilson), Quillan is reinstated to ride Miss Henry's horse to a final victory over Miljan's entry.

Additionally to players mentioned, Ruth Gillette will be seen as Lillian Russell and John Kelly as John L. Sullivan. Other players in the cast are Matt McHugh, Pierre Watkin, Holmes Herbert, Snub Pollard and Gertrude Hoffman.

The story is an original by Jerry Chodorov and Bert Granet. Gordon Rigby and Joseph Fields did the screen play and Irving Pichel is director.

The Bowery Princess

(20th Century-Fox)

Comedy Drama

With all new songs and dances, this production has Shirley Temple in the setting of New York as it was 80 years ago. In prospect it appears to have all the elements expected in a Temple picture. In the gas light era, it takes the child star from the roisterous old Bowery to brownstone mansions where the elite lived. In it Shirley, as Little Eva in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," is the toast of the town. As the romantic, dramatic and comedy phases of the story are developed, music, dancing and ice skating have a substantiating function.

In again presenting the little box office leader, the producers have surrounded her with an exceptionally strong supporting cast. It includes Frank Morgan, whose popularity with theatregoers needs no further description, Helen Westley, presently outstanding in "Show Boat," Robert Kent, starred in "The Crime of Dr. Forbes," who shares the romantic phase of the story with Delma Byron, previously seen in "Everybody's Old Man," Astrid Allwyn, Berton Churchill, Stepin Fetchit and John Carradine. Besides presenting the Hall Johnson Choir, of radio and "Green Pastures" fame, the cast also included Paul Stanton, Julius Tannen, Herman Bing, Jack Clifford, Betty Jean Hainey, Arthur Aylesworth and Greta Meyer.

The story is an original screen play by Arthur Sheekman and Nat Perrin. Music and lyrics are by Jimmy McHugh and Ted Koehler. Dances are staged by Bill Robinson. William A. Seiter is the director.

A Son Comes Home

(Paramount)

Drama

Only a vestige of this story's character is found in the title. In terse synopsis it is a dramatic story of mother love. It tells of a woman who had waited years for her son, who had run away, to return. A newspaper reporter publishes her story. A murder is committed. A boy who has been an innocent participant in it poses as her son. As he is friendless and in trouble, the mother permits him to think she believes his claim. But the boy cracks under when he sees a picture of the woman's dead husband and admits he is advancing a fraudulent claim. At the same time he recognizes in the picture a resemblance of the man who was with him and who committed the murder. The widow, her daughter, and the newspaper man track down the real culprit. He is the missing son, who dies in a hail of police bullets, preserving forever the secret of his identity from all but his mother.

An unusual story, the cast selected, considering past appearances, is also unusual. Mary Boland will be seen as the mother. The boy who poses as her son is Donald Woods, and the real son is Anthony Nace, a screen newcomer. Wallace Ford is the reporter and Julie Hayden, remembered for her work in "The Scoundrel," is Miss Boland's daughter. Roger Imhof as a detective rounds out the principal cast. In support are found Joe Sawyer, Edward Gargan, Charles Middleton, Thomas Jackson, John Wray, Lee Kohlmar and Herbert Rawlinson.

The production is based on an original story by Harry Hervey and Sylvia Thalberg did the screen play. E. A. Dupont is directing.

Mystery Drama

The problem which Charlie Chan is called upon to solve this time has two angles—who murdered a millionaire horse owner? and who killed a famous Australian race horse? The second angle has a semi-topical significance inas much as a great Antipodean horse, Pharlap, brought to this country a few years ago, died under circumstances that have never been fully explained. It is a story of drama and murder on shipboard and skulduggery on the race track. In it a murderer is brought to justice and a betting coup foiled in the manner that is only possible to such a detective as Charlie Chan.

Though suggested by the character created by the late Earl Derr Biggers, this, as were several of the past Chans, is an original story. Robert Ellis and Helen Logan are credited with it. The screen play is the work of Edward T. Lowe and John Patrick. Direction is by H. Bruce Humberstone, a specialist in productions of this type, as attested by some of his recent pictures, "The Dragon Murder Case" and "Ladies Love Danger."

Warner Oland, who created the Chan role, is again starred in this picture. Keye Luke is making his fourth appearance as Oland's Americanized Chinese son. Romantic contrast to the dramatic motivation is shared by Helen Wood and Thomas Beck. In the other principal roles, a number of players who have demonstrated their talents as character actors will be seen. Included are Alan Dinehart, Gloria Roy, Jonathan Hale, Gavin Muir, G. P. Huntley, Jr., and George Irving. Additionally Frank Coghlan, Jr., Frankie Darro, John Rogers and John H. Allen will be presented.

Much of the story's action takes place at the famous Santa Anita Race Track, where in the thrill action race sequences, some of the most spectacular events of the recent racing season will be seen again.

GOVERNMENTAL EDICTS IMPOSE NEW REGULATIONS ON HUNGARIAN TRADE

Decrees Prohibit Double Bills; Specify Number and Length of Performances; Force Exhibitor to Show Hungarian Newsreels

by ENDRE HEVESI
in Budapest

The film trade in Hungary is almost entirely dependent on the government, which imposes rules and prohibitions on nearly every section of the picture industry.

A government license is necessary for the opening of a new theatre, and not even a change of premises, an enlargement or rebuilding of a licensed theatre is possible without a special permit.

Managing directors or projectionists can only be employed if they have a special working permit, issued by the Minister for Home Affairs.

A licensed exhibitor can only enter into partnership with an associate after first obtaining the government's consent.

Every exhibitor must show the Hungarian Newsreel, which he is compelled to buy at a fixed price.

He must renew his license at the police every month and he can obtain it only in case he is not in arrears with his entertainment tax and if he can prove that he has duly shown the Hungarian Newsreel.

The government interference imposed upon exhibitors in every way is most oppressive. Distributors are not so heavily burdened with government edicts, but they, too, have much trouble, owing to certain strict rules. To import a foreign feature, they must first acquire a permit ticket and must have the film censored before release. For shooting of locally-produced Hungarian films, the scenario must be submitted in advance to the approval of an official committee.

Added to the already existing rules new government edicts were issued on May 15th, 1936, which interfere even more heavily with the individual management of cinemas than the former regulations have done. In order to understand the full significance of these recent decrees, we have to look back upon the situation existing before they were issued.

Former Status Defined

It had been a general custom in Hungary that the deluxe theatres showed a Hungarian and a foreign newsreel, a cartoon or an educational, and finally a feature in the course of a program. A similar program was shown in the cinemas of Hungary's eight big cities, as well as in most of the smaller provincial cinemas. The Budapest second, third and fourth week cinemas, however, the neighborhood theatres as well as a small fraction of provincial cinemas, exhibited two full-length features in addition to the newsreels and the cartoon or educational. There are 14 deluxe and first-class theatres and 66 second, third, and fourth-week neighborhood cinemas in Budapest.

This was naturally a dangerous competition to deluxe theatres in Budapest, since a great part of the public preferred to wait a few weeks for novelties and see two full features for less money than they had to pay to see one in the premiere theatres. In order to make up somehow for this great advantage of the neighborhood houses, deluxe theatres introduced the system of half-price tickets at the first performance every day, at four p.m. on weekdays and at two p.m. on Sundays. This, again, was greatly resented by the owners of the subsequent-week cinemas and they have been clamoring for the abolition of the half-price ticket system for years. A regular civil war raged between exhibitors, and although several attempts have been made to bring about a compromise, they could not find a solution

The situation in the distributing trade was the following:

Former Distributor Regulation

In July 1935 two edicts had been issued by Mr. Miklós de Kozma, Minister for Home Affairs. The first of these compelled all cinemas to exhibit Hungarian talkers in a proportion of at least 10 per cent of all pictures shown. Half of these Hungarian talkers had to be local product, while the other half could be imported, but synchronized locally into Hungarian. After January 1936 the proportion of Hungarian speaking-pictures shown was raised to 15 per cent, two-thirds of which could be foreign synchronized product.

This edict had been issued in favor of independent Hungarian production which, indeed, flourished and reached quite a boom for a time. Sixteen Hungarian features had been shot during 1935, work was going on feverishly in the state-owned Hunnia studios and in the Filmirode studios—and then the production boom was extinguished as suddenly as it had risen.

Distributors found that it did not pay to produce home-made films, most of which yielded but small profits to their producers, some even failing to bring in the expenses of production. Distributors argued that the financial failure was due to the fact that the Budapest small cinemas and the provincial cinemas paid ridiculously low prices for the Hungarian films, on the plea of having to show an additional foreign feature as well at every performance. The distributors strove to abolish the system of two full features and demanded that whenever the cinemas presented a Hungarian film they should show no additional full-length foreign feature. Since their demands were not fulfilled and production, in most cases, failed to prove lucrative, the film producers simply ceased making new local films. From February, 1936, up to June no Hungarian film was being shot either in the Hunnia studio or in the Filmiroda studio. Only German films, financed by foreign capitalists, were being shot in the two studios.

The Budapest second, third and fourth-week cinemas protested against the abolishing of the two-feature system. They argued that their public had got used to seeing two full-sized films in one program, and that they would stay away if they got less for their money. If this popular system were abolished, subsequent-week theatres would go bankrupt, they said. As a further argument, a poll was made among neighborhood cinemagoers. The great majority of the public of the small Budapest cinemas and the provincial ones voted for the two-feature-in-one-performance system—a great number even voted for three full-sized features.

Exhibitors Say New Rules Will Bring Bankruptcy; American Branch Heads Foresee Gains in Trade Practice Changes

These conflicting opinions and interests waged war against each other during the past year. But the three edicts issued by the Minister for Home Affairs on May 15th, 1936, ended the controversy in a sudden and violent manner.

The first edict rules that after August 20, 1936, no cinema may exhibit in one program more than one feature which is longer than 1,200 meters. (In the summer weeks from June 1 up to August 20, which always bring weak box office returns, this law may be put out of practice, since the majority of the public stays away from cinemas in the hot season anyway.) Deluxe theatres are not permitted to show a longer program than 3,400 metres altogether, including cartoons, educationals, newsreels and the big feature. Second, third and fourth-week cinemas may show a program no longer than 3,800 metres. Every performance must include the Hungarian Newsreel. The last performance must end before midnight.

This edict means that the subsequent-week cinemas are allowed to show one big feature only, instead of the previous two-feature system. On the other hand, deluxe theatres may not, after August 20th, have more than three performances on weekdays and more than four on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. The cheapest seats of deluxe theatres cannot cost less than the minimum fixed by the Minister for Home Affairs; neither half-price tickets nor cut-rate tickets at a price lower than the minimum fixed by the Minister may be sold.

A single film copy may be projected in, at the most, two theatres, during the same performing time, i.e., the practice indulged in by chains of neighborhood theatres, of shifting the same copy from one theatre to another several times in the course of one afternoon and evening is restricted to two theatres.

According to the second edict, issued jointly with the Minister for Industry, the board of censure may only permit the exhibition of an imported product shorter than 1,200 metres on presentation of a short-film permit ticket. Such short-film permit tickets are obtainable from the president of the censure board, but are only given to firms which have locally produced a short film in the Hungarian language, approved by the board of censors. These short-film permit tickets may be sold to other persons.

EDICTS BIND HUNGARY

This is an entirely new restriction, for up till now films under a length of 1,200 metres could be imported without the presentation of any permit ticket.

The third edict rules that all cinemas must exhibit Hungarian speaking pictures over 1,200 metres in length, in a proportion of 20 per cent to the number of all pictures shown. Half of this number may be foreign product synchronized in Hungarian.

The producer of every full-length Hungarian feature receives a premium of eight importation permit tickets, but the producer of a Hungarian synchronization gets a premium of only three.

The president of the censors' board issues a certain number of permit tickets for the import of foreign short films for the benefit of those who have locally produced a Hungarian travelogue or educational. Five of these permit tickets for shorts are given as a premium for a Hungarian short film of 200 metres, ten for one of 400 metres, and 20 for one over 600 metres.

Old System More Liberal

Formerly the producer of one Hungarian film or Hungarian synchronization, received seven import permit tickets; that is to say, he was entitled to import seven foreign features on the basis of the tickets received as a premium for the production of one locally-made or locally-synchronized feature. Foreign features over 1,200 metres in length were admitted on presentation of one permit ticket. The new edict brings important changes in this respect.

First of all, it rules that all cinemas must exhibit Hungarian-speaking films in a proportion of 20 per cent of all pictures shown. This is intended to give new life to the now stagnant Hungarian film production. Also, to promote production to a further extent, the producer of every Hungarian film receives eight permit tickets as premium, whereas the production of a Hungarian language synchronization will only be rewarded by three tickets instead of the seven accorded previously.

Old Law a Failure

In other words, this is the avowal of the complete failure of the synchronization law which, incidentally, had been foretold by experts at the time when it was issued. The former law, according to which the producer of a Hungarian language synchronization was awarded as many permit tickets as the producer of a full-sized feature, was prompted by the desire to promote synchronization and, in this way, to create new possibilities for work. But, as experts foresaw, the idea was a mistake from the beginning. The public could not get accustomed to the foreign films synchronized in Hungarian, particularly since they were technically far from perfect. The public of the big cities refused to see synchronized films.

The Hungarian producers themselves protested against this law, for they thought it unfair that one who paid 15,000 pengoes only to have a foreign film synchronized into Hungarian, should be awarded the same number of permit tickets as the producer who spent 120 to 150,000 pengoes on the production of a complete original Hungarian feature.

The fact that features under 1,200 metres are not admitted without permit ticket, either, affects most of the local branch offices of all foreign productive firms, American ones in particular, because most of the foreign travel films and cartoons were imported from the United States. The purpose of the new edict, which makes it necessary to present a permit ticket when importing a foreign short, is to promote the production of Hungarian shorts, which has been neglected so far.

Americans Undisturbed

The local branch managers of American film companies do not judge the new edicts to be prejudicial to their business interests. Mr. Charles Matzner, the Hungarian representative of Twentieth Century-Fox, told us in an interview what the effects of the new edicts will be on the general situation of the film trade.

"The one-feature system is the right thing," said Mr. Matzner, "because two full features in one program cannot possibly be exhibited without shortening both, cutting out parts which may not be essential as far as the plot goes but involving omissions which may damage the film from the artistic point of view. Under the two-feature system, pictures had been projected with greater speed than they should be. These drawbacks were not calculated to develop the good taste and the artistic pretentions of the cinemagoing public.

"From a financial point of view the new edicts have even greater advantages. For years the subsequent-week cinemas in Budapest paid to the distributing branches only 25, 20, sometimes no more than 15 per cent of the gross box-office receipts for one film, instead of the 35 or 40 per cent which they get from the one-feature houses. The new system will make it possible that the distributors should receive 30 to 40 per cent from the gross receipts for one feature and additional short films.

"Owing to the new law that 20 per cent of every cinema's program must consist of Hungarian-speaking pictures, there will be less demand for imported films than in the past. Thus the local branches of American companies will have to choose the best products for Hungarian import, because only really first-rate films will be able to stand the competition under the changed circumstances.

Film Lasts Longer

"It is a vital part of the new edicts that a copy of a picture can be shown in two cinemas simultaneously at the most," Mr. Matzner continued. So far it had been customary to project the same copy in 3 or 4 subsequent-week cinemas simultaneously, and as a result the copy was ruined in a short time. Also, up to now a picture was exhibited by ten or even twenty cinemas on the same days. The result was that the picture disappeared from the market in a very short time and could not be properly exploited. According to the new edict, the same picture can be exhibited simultaneously in no more than six or eight. Subsequent-week cinemas. This certainly gives a better chance of exploitation.

"The new edict is also advantageous for the import of American shorts. Deluxe theatres may show a program of 3,400 metres, other cinemas of 3,800 metres. Since most features have a length of about 2,400 metres, this leaves 1,000 or 1,400 metres' length of film needed for every program in addition. The length of the compulsory Hungarian newsreel is about 250 metres, that of a Hungarian short film about 200 metres, so there is still a demand for 600 or 800 metres which will be mostly supplied by foreign, especially American, cartoons or educationals.

Other Distributors Agree

Other local branch managers of American film companies agree that, on a whole, the new edicts are advantageous for the trade. They all say that fewer pictures will have to be imported to Hungary from now on because the exhibitors will not be able to buy two or three second-rate films along with a great feature, as they had hitherto done. There will be a restricted demand, consequently exhibitors will only buy the very best product, but at the same time, they will be able to pay higher prices or royalties than they did before. Consequently, American companies won't find it necessary to import second-rate films to Hungary, because they will make larger profits through selling only the best product at better prices, and at the same time will be able to reduce the administration expenses of their local branches.

Of course second, third and fourth-week cinema exhibitors are not so optimistic about the effect of the edicts. They complain that their cinemas will go bankrupt.

The next season will show which of these opinions will be justified.

New Boston Law A Liberalization Of Censorship

Enactment of a Massachusetts law liberalizing the technique of theatre censorship in Boston was hailed this week by the National Council on Freedom from Censorship, in New York, a unit of the American Civil Liberties Union, as "a notable victory in the fight to urge free expression for the arts."

The council credited the change to the contest made in the courts last winter by Herman Shumlin, producer and director, and the Boston Civil Liberties Committee against the ban on "The Children's Hour." The council saw in the new law support for its thesis that "every act of suppression should be fought." The particular battle may be lost, they said, "but the results in public education are of great importance."

The new provision amends the Theatre Act of 1915 and provides that no license of any Boston theatre shall be suspended or revoked "on any ground having to do with public morality or decency, without a hearing." Decision on license revocations rests in the hands of a committee of three, the mayor, the police commissioner and a member of the art commission.

The old act read: "The Mayor or Police Commissioner or the Chief Justice of the Municipal Court may revoke or suspend any license at their pleasure."

The new bill was introduced by Representative Mason Sears, of Dedham, and was signed on June 11 by Governor James M. Curley.

"This law means, in effect, that no show will be banned in Boston until it has had at least one performance," Clifton Read, secretary of the National Council, said. "The play may be stopped then on a special order for three days while a hearing is being held. If the special committee rules against the play by a majority vote, then it may be suppressed.

"No more plays will be banned without a hearing. The old technique of sending a 'censor' to New York to pass on plays that the Boston public may see is ended. If this law is administered in good faith, and we are assured by our Massachusetts associates that it will be, then a notable victory has been won in the fight for greater freedom of expression in the arts," said the council.

MARC KLAW—He Taught That Movie Rights Have a Price

Death of Pioneer Recalls First Film Plagiarism Fight, Back in 1898

by JAMES P. CUNNINGHAM*

THE DEATH last week in Bracken Fell, at Hassocks, in Sussex, England, of Marc Klaw, at 78, was fittingly observed by the press for his leadership in an earlier era of showmanship. But attention was entirely directed to the Klaw and Erlanger of the legitimate theatre. Only a few of the really old pioneers remember the equally-as-stormy Klaw and Erlanger of the came-the-dawn era of motion pictures. The careers of both have a considerable relation to early screen history.

Marc Klaw waged the very first plagiarism fight on behalf of a film property, on the grounds that he held the exclusive rights to film the Passion of Christ! He lost.

Here, in Marc Klaw, came the first endeavor of the established art-industry of the stage to reach out for the new medium of the film.

It was in 1897 when Marc Klaw and Abraham Erlanger, wellknown theatrical producers even then, seized from Rich G. Hollaman the opportunity to buy the rights to film the Passion Play put on by the folk of Horitz in Bohemia. It was an annual reenactment by villagers of the tradition-hallowed decennial Passion at Oberammergau.

Shown at Old Daly Theatre

The Klaw and Erlanger expedition, first to set out from America for Europe on production-bent, sailed for Horitz, made its pictures and returned. The picture, in three reels, went on, in 1898, at the old Daly theatre, above Columbus Circle, in New York, where, a quarter of a century later, Miss Mae West invited arrest with her sex plays. Anyway, since the art of subtitles for pictures had not yet been born, Klaw and Erlanger found it necessary to accompany their film with the spoken word, voiced by a platform lecturer, minus the "pointer."

Mr. Hollaman, filled with ire and a desire to outdo this Klaw and Erlanger effort from Horitz, brought to light an old Passion Play script which one Salmi Morse, potboiler and playwright, in his best patriarchal manner had spent some 17 years a-polishing.

The uncovered roof of the Grand Central Palace Building on Lexington Avenue in New York was leased by Mr. Hollaman for the purpose. The agent for the structure was annoyed later when he found the freight elevator laden with camels going aloft to the new Holy Land on the roof.

To that roof Mr. Hollaman went with his camels and asses, oxen and snakes, and the very first motion picture scenario, as boiled down from Salmi Morse's 17-year effort at play writing. Mr. Morse had never lived to see his lifework produced. A few years earlier, after a period of melancholy, the police, on a wintry morning, took the body of Morse out of the North River.

The cast of Hollaman's Passion Play included Frank Russell, as the Christus. When the production finally opened, at the old Eden Musee, on West 23rd Street, on January 30, 1898, in competition to Klaw's Passion, Mr. Russell was prohibited from entering or appearing in the vicinity of the Eden Musee lest he be recognized by some keen-eyed member of the audience. This would have damaged the "Oberammergau" atmosphere of the Grand Central Palace product.

Incognito via Fire Escape

But Russell climbed a fire escape in the dark and attended his own first night incognito. He was, then, one of the first "stars" to attend his own "first night."

That's a considerable distance from the present glamorous Kleig-light appearances of Hollywood stars at their premieres, and their radio croonings, soap endorsements and vaudeville tours.

The newspaper attentions were favorable to Mr. Hollaman for at least a week. Then something happened. It is not to be implied that Marc Klaw had anything to do with it, but in some fashion word leaked out to the New York Herald, on the morning of February 1, 1898, that Hollaman's Passion Play was a fraud, that it was not a reproduction of scenes from the Oberammergau Passion Play, but that Klaw and Erlanger's "is genuine." Then, when Hollaman's Passion Play commenced to build at the box office there came a call from Marc Klaw and a demand that Rich Hollaman discontinue his performances. "We own the exclusive rights!" Mr. Hollaman was informed by the fiery Klaw.

"Exclusive rights to the Passion Play?" Mr. Hollaman snorted in derision. "Who did you get them from, the original cast?"

So Mr. Hollaman continued showing his Passion Play at the Eden Musee, surrounding pictures of his Grand Central Palace Jerusalem, garden of Gethsemane, scene of the Cross, and such, with actors in their biblical costumes over heavy flannel underwear. There were mornings on that Grand Central Palace roof when the snow had to be swept out of Gethsemane.

And now the Christus was being projected on the Eden Musee's screen under the shadows of the Musee's dusty collection of mysterioso and knicknacks of emotional stimuli, death masks of Napoleon and of Marie Antoinette, executions of wax criminals by wax elephants, an automaton chess player, and a program of song, sometimes dance. Remembering all the while that it was Marc Klaw who sent the Christus of Mr. Hollaman's into that eerie place.

Edison Gets to Thinking

Along at about this time Thomas Alva Edison, retrospecting in his laboratories in the Jersey Oranges, began to think just slightly more of the prospects of the motion picture, which he had permitted to slip from his control. On February 16, 1898, Marc Klaw and Abraham Erlanger, because of their motion pictures of the Passion, became one of the first defendants in the most momentous line of litigation in all the litigious history of the screen, as instituted by Thomas Edison, on behalf of his early patents, and against all infringers.

Klaw and Erlanger became involved, along with dozens of other defendants, in two years of court embattlements with the Edison interests, battles that were interspersed with many a dramatic incident, the most impressive coming while the lawyers were struggling with motions and arguments, when H. N. Marvin, head of the American Mutoscope and Biograph Company, a defendant with Klaw and Erlanger, sought a commercial solution which came near to changing the whole course of motion picture history. Mr. Marvin recognized that the only hope of prosperity in the films was a peace, and that there could be no peace without Edison. Marc Klaw in all probability agreed. Regardless, he was a very much interested defendant as he witnessed, from the outside, the secret and private negotiations out of which Mr. Marvin, on April 12, 1900, secured an option to buy the entire Edison motion picture interests for $500,000! It would have meant control of the industry, now worth 5,000 times that half million. Mr. Marvin paid down to Thomas Edison $2,500 on his option and arranged a bank loan for the coming payments.

But the Bank Fails

With melodramatic fatality, a few months later, on the day when the first payment, a sum of $300,000, was due, the bank failed. So the court war had to go on.

It was Klaw and Erlanger who brought to the attention of the motion picture business the necessity of first acquiring the motion picture rights to a story property before making that story property a motion picture.

In December, 1907, the old Kalem Company boldly stepped out with a most daring and spectacular project, "Ben Hur," in one whole reel. It was planned as an inexpensive production. Miss Gene Gauntier prepared the "working synopsis," as they called it then, from the "Ben Hur" book, and the settings were ready made at Pain's Fireworks show at Manhattan Beach in New York.

KLAW–TUTOR ON STORY RIGHTS

There was just one minor oversight in connection with the production. Kalem failed to acquire the motion picture rights to "Ben Hur"—largely for the rather simple reason that motion picture rights were unknown. It was not at all certain that there was any such thing. And in all instances of the kind the motion picture industry always generously gave itself the benefit of the doubt.

The Kalem version of "Ben Hur" went out to attract considerable attention.

First Suit of Kind

Then one day a process server from the offices of David Gerber, attorney, dropped down to 131 West 24th Street, in New York, and proceeded to serve Frank Marion, secretary-treasurer of Kalem, with the papers in an action brought in the United States Court of the Southern District of New York by Harper and Brothers, publishers of the "Ben Hur" book; Marc Klaw and Abraham Erlanger, producers of the "Ben Hur" stage spectacle, and Henry Wallace, as administrator of the estate of Susan E. Wallace, deceased, heir of Lew Wallace, of Crawfordsville, Indiana, author of the novel "Ben Hur." In other words, Kalem was sued with great completeness and vigor.

This suit, starting in the mind of Marc Klaw, was the first issue of its kind. It was the precedent-making action that was to establish the legal character of the motion picture as a medium of dramatic and literary expression.

The suit was strongly defended by Kalem and fought through to the United States Supreme Court. Kalem made an effort to show that its production on the screen was "merely a series of photographs" and also set up the plea that, after all, the picture was just a good advertisement for the book and the stage play.

Most Costly One-Reel Scenario

But Kalem paid $25,000, in a decision handed down in 1911. That, plus the expenses of the litigation, made "Ben Hur" the most costly one-reel scenario in the entire history of the business. Oddly, in later years, "Ben Hur" became the most expensive feature production of all time, costing the Goldwyn-Loew-Metro interests some $5,000,000, due, principally, to excessive remakes—and more remakes, from Rome to Hollywood. The chariot race alone cost $250,000. It was said to present a run for the money.

Again, in 1909, Klaw and Erlanger were responsible, in their fiery fashion, in the writing of another important chapter in early screen history.

The technique of scenario writing was beginning to evolve at this juncture when a heated difference arose between Minnie Maddern Fiske, the actress, and her stage producers, Klaw and Erlanger. K. and E.'s theatrical advertising, as a result, was withdrawn from the Dramatic Mirror, a theatrical journal of the day, controlled by the Minnie Maddern Fiske family. As an emergency measure, the Mirror sought advertising from the "despised" motion picture, and Frank Woods, one of the first and most famous of the early film scenario writers, became the editor of a Dramatic Mirror movie column in order to give support to the advertising solicitors of the paper. A few weeks of screen observation brought Mr. Woods in contact with Lee Dougherty, who was Biograph's motion picture editorial department, and resulted in the sale by Mr. Wood of three of his "suggestions" for scenarios at $15 per suggestion.

All Scenario-Mad

The whole Dramatic Mirror staff, and many on the outside looking in, suddenly became scenario-mad, when Mr. Woods' success with "suggestions" became known. It was in this way a famous dramatic assortment of early scenarists evolved—George Terwilliger, Anita Loos, Laurette Taylor, Marjorie Rambeau, Blanche Bates, Frances Starr, among others.

Early in 1913 the "feature picture" movement was given considerable impetus by the invasion of Klaw and Erlanger into motion pictures. The magnates of the stage had for some time been considering the screen more seriously. They wanted a share in the new bonanza.

Verification of low murmuring rumors of a Klaw and Erlanger invasion of the "movies" on a grand scale and with bold, pretentious plans were now verified by fact. The Protective Amusement Company had been formed and an arrangement made for Biograph to photograph its pictures, to be produced from the selected stage successes of Marc Klaw and Abraham Erlanger. Here, too, Marc Klaw and his partner set a motion picture precedent, being the first to deliver the theatre of the drama to the motion picture as a source of story supply under a working arrangement.

These pictures were to be imposing five-reelers for presentation in summer showings at legitimate theatres and at such of the motion picture theatres as might be induced to pay for this mighty and de luxe film service. Klaw and Erlanger had beaten their envious stage colleagues to the break into motion pictures, and under the manufacturing wing of Biograph, ablest of the producers, besides being politically the strongest arm of the industry.

It was written on the slate that Klaw and Erlanger were to make the great productions of the day, and at Biograph's plant, where the young David Wark Griffith prevailed as the biggest producer of them all, doing the biggest productions. The Klaw and Erlanger arrangement, therefore, did not appeal intensely, if at all, to the ambitious Mr. Griffith, and he stormed in protest to the Biograph lords, demanding a large block of stock in Biograph, or at least ten per cent of Biograph's profits. Both were refused, with vigor, by J. J. Kennedy, who admonished Griffith with the observation, "You've got the hundred thousand dollar picture idea in the back of your head."

Meanwhile, Klaw and Erlanger productions went ahead. Among the notables introduced to the motion picture by Pat Casey, manager of the Protective Amusement Company project, was Bert Williams, the negro comedian. Williams was at the time an international minstrel and stage celebrity. He made two comedies for Marc Klaw and Biograph. One required a graveyard location. Marc Klaw and Bert Williams discovered a satisfactory graveyard on Staten Island, where a thrifty sexton locked the gates and held off a funeral while the scenes were photographed. Another Williams comedy, "Darktown Justice," started out to be a profound hit, and Marc Klaw was happy. A wave of race antagonism arose and terminated Williams' screen career. At a Brooklyn presentation of "Darktown Justice" a race riot resulted in the death of two men. That made Marc Klaw unhappy.

A Foredoomed Project

The ambitious Klaw and Erlanger film project was foredoomed, for many reasons. A large number of the motion picture exhibitors had never heard of the august stage concern of Marc Klaw and Abraham Erlanger. Many of those who had were showmen with old grudges against the stage magnates of Broadway. Also there was a feeling in the office of Klaw and Erlanger that any theatre ought to be willing to pay a minimum of $50 a day for a K. and E. picture play. This was in a period when the better theatres were just beginning to dare to charge ten cents admission. Fifty-dollar-a-day film rentals were few and widely scattered.

Eventually the K. and E. photoplays were cut from five reels to three and offered along with miscellaneous two and three-reel "features" of the General Film Company, sold for what they might bring in the run of the trade.

That was the beginning of the end of Marc Klaw in motion pictures, although his was but one of the first of stage efforts at an invasion of the screen. Experience was to prove, in another quarter of a century, that the motion picture was another and independent art.

Today, Marc Klaw is dead, at 78. His story of the legitimate theatre is another tale.

CONVENTION TIME ENDS; 30 COMPANIES' FINAL PLANS

United Artists' Gathering in Hollywood Will Send Last of Large Companies into Free-for-All Contract Race

The 1936-37 convention season will come to a close after this weekend when United Artists, last of the "Big Eight" to meet, convenes in Hollywood. Columbia's convention was held this week, in Chicago, the others meeting variously since Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer started the season last May 11th, also in Chicago.

With the conclusion of the convention period comes the climax to the annual competitive selling engagement in the field, releasing all companies for the scramble to the exhibitor's doorstep with contracts and product portfolios. Virtually all companies, however, have been engaged in the preliminaries for weeks, already negotiating a large part of their normal circuit sales.

Five of the large companies are quoting major circuits delivery of 270 features, 134 of them in the upper brackets and 10 at a peak percentage figure of 40 per cent for the new season. MGM lists four in the top percentage division, Warner a like number, RKO Radio two, Paramount and Twentieth Century-Fox none. (See table in adjoining columns.)

How the Percentage Offerings Of Five Sales Companies Compare

The percentage offerings of five companies on new season product are compared in the following table, which represents the opening quotation:

Company	Total	Top Group	40%	35%	30%	25%
MGM	50	30	4	6	6	14
Paramount	60	26	.	4	6	16
RKO Radio......	48	22	2	3	5	12
20th Century-Fox.	52	26	.	4	6	16
Warner	60	30	4	5	5	15
TOTAL	270	134	10	22	28	73

There is a gap of one in the Warner bid. This represents an unnamed picture on which the percentage figure has not been set, although circuit men are under the impression it probably will be "Anthony Adverse," to be offered at 50 per cent.

Columbia is offering 58 pictures and is understood to have indicated willingness to make new deals on the basis of this season's, provided circuits will pay 35 per cent for Pictures No. 41 and 42, which are to be Frank Capra productions.

Independents Get Set

The independents, too, are about set on their final plans for the new season, several companies this week clearing up odds and ends which stood in their way of a complete program.

New season's product developments of both independents and the major companies this week resulted in the following activities, including the formation of new companies.

Astor Productions

Astor Productions, Inc., has been formed with Robert Savini as president, and C. J. Tevlin, to produce 12 features for national release during the next two years. The schedule will be produced jointly with Morgan Pictures, Ltd., headed by George Bernard Morgan. The first picture will be James Fennimore Cooper's "The Deerslayer," the second, "The Wreck of the Hesperus" and the third, "The Salt of the Earth."

The company also will distribute, through the state rights market, the following pictures received from Sherman S. Krellberg of Regal Pictures: "Man's Best Friend," "When Lightning Strikes," "Fighting Fury," "Thunderbolt," "Fighting Lady," "Scandals of Paris," "Daredevils of the Earth," "Wolves of the Underworld," "Hollywood Mystery" and "Get That Venus."

Atlantic Film Productions

Thomas Dodds, chairman of Atlantic Film Productions, Ltd., whose first picture will be "Thunder in the City," starring Edward G. Robinson, has arrived in New York from England in search of talent.

Brenon

Herbert Brenon is now en route to London from New York. He will make five pictures in England and will also produce two for British International Pictures there besides the three for the Motion Picture Foundation, American organization.

Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures

Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures has signed a contract with Cinecolor for two pictures a year for three years. The first to be made under the new agreement will be "The Phantom of the Santa Fe." Sixteen features is the final determination of the company, to be released in two groups of eight.

Capitol

C. B. Cochran has signed with Max Schach of Capitol in London to produce a Technicolor feature, under the direction of Walter Forde, at Denham in the fall. General Film Distributors will release the film, which will be a revue, featuring old and new vaudeville stars.

Central Films, Ltd.

Lewis D. Collins, director, has signed with Central Films, Ltd., of Canada, to direct a feature which will star William Gargan. The picture has not yet been titled. It will be produced in Canada and released by Columbia.

Chesterfield

Academy Pictures, Inc., headed by Phil Smith in Boston and who also operates a circuit and distributes cash giveaways, has taken over the New England franchise of Chesterfield. These pictures were formerly handled by American Film Exchange and later by First Division.

Columbia

Columbia Pictures concluded its annual sales convention in Chicago this week at the Drake hotel, at which the delegates were told that the company would release 58 features this year, 32 of which were described in detail, as well as a program of short features and a reissue of six Buck Jones westerns. See the story on page 65.

Crescent Pictures

"The Glory Trail," first of a series of six which E. B. Derr is producing for Crescent Pictures, has been finished in Hollywood.

Dynamic Pictures

Marie Barrell of Dynamic Pictures is beginning the theatrical distribution of "Wonderland of Gaspe."

Epilogues Distributing Corporation

Epilogues Distributing Corporation revealed this week that the national release date on its product has been set for August 1. Sam Brown, said a number of deals have just been consummated with several circuits and that his company will produce 52 subjects a year, allowing weekly changes of two sound tracks, one containing orchestration to be used for overtures, intermissions, spills and chasers and the other a "goodnight" dialogue for exit music. Harry Fields, formerly with Universal, is in charge of production.

Gainsborough

Gainsborough has become a separate production unit, engaging its own stars, directors and writers, instead of functioning as a subsidiary of Gaumont British. The company has announced 11 pictures for next year, doubling its previous output.

Edward Black has been named as associate producer, working under the supervision of

BRITISH HOLLYWOOD PARTY MAY BECOME INTERNATIONAL AFFAIR

France, Belgium, Spain and Sweden Invited to Join in Expedition; Tour Includes Principal American Cities

Scophony, Ltd., Asserts Its System Makes Cinema - Size Television Screen Usable for Impending Broadcasts

by BRUCE ALLAN
in London

Planned originally as a holiday visit by British exhibitors to New York and Hollywood, the trip organized by Arthur Taylor, secretary of the London and Home Counties Branch of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association, now shows signs of developing into a much more ambitious affair, with an international character.

Assured already of over thirty British travelers, including representatives of leading circuits, Mr. Taylor has extended invitations to the exhibitor associations of France, Belgium, Spain and Sweden to associate themselves with the plan.

If, as is expected, this invitation is accepted even in one or two of these countries, the total of the party may become from fifty to one hundred and it will assume the aspect of a delegation of European exhibitors to the American field.

Already planned, on top of a nine days' stay on the Coast, three of them in San Francisco, are stopoffs in Chicago, on the return journey, and at Buffalo for the purpose of visiting Niagara, where the visitors will be met by Col. A. J. Cooper, President of the Canadian M.P.T.O., and escorted to Toronto for a few hours.

Official contact has also been established with Mr. E. E. Kuykendall, President of M.P.T.O.A. and may affect the visitors' plans in New York where, on July 28th, they are to be guests of Radio City Music Hall and Quigley Publications jointly at a reception attended by industry executives and leading New York exhibitors. The schedule of the trip allows two days in New York on the outward trip and one on the homeward journey. Sailing from England on the Queen Mary, the party will return on the Normandie.

Claims Television Advances

Announcing the increase of its capital from £140,000 to £300,000 and its transformation from a private to a public company, Scophony, Ltd., the television organization formed by radio interests with big city backing, makes some important claims for its system.

On the basis of 117 patents in its control, with 105 pending, Scophony asserts it is developing apparatus capable of receiving the B.B.C. transmissions from the Alexandra Palace in July and that it has another receiver "capable of giving pictures of a size suitable, not only for home entertainment, but also for large cinema theatres."

The transmission of television signals over telephone cables is another claim.

Chairman of Scophony, Ltd., is Sir Maurice Bonham-Carter, a director of the banking firm of O. T. Falk & Co. W. S. Verrells, the vice-chairman, is the chairman of E. K. Cole, Ltd., manufacturers of radio receivers on a large scale. The managing director is S. Sagall and other members of the board are G. W. Walton, original inventor of some of the "optico-mechanical" Scophony devices, and Arthur Levey, who will be remembered in connection with American production enterprises some years ago.

SEATTLE IN CIRCUIT OF ROADSHOW PLAN

Seattle will become a unit in a circuit of six key centers to play legitimate road show dramatic and musical attractions, it has been announced by Kent Thompson, manager of the Metropolitan theatre, Seattle.

San Francisco, Los Angeles, Portland, Vancouver and Salt Lake City are the other cities in the chain, which will provide a 10-week or 12-week booking for Chicago shows.

Olson and Johnson's musical unit, now appearing in California, will be the first attraction to make the circuit. It has been booked in Seattle for one week beginning July 19th.

Distributors' Quota Problems

Various surmises were caused by the last minute postponement of presentation of the Kinematograph Renters' Society statement on revision of the Films Act to the Lord Moyne Committee which is investigating for the Government. A K.R.S. deputation was due to wait on the Committee on June 9th and the only statement in regard to the last minute cancellation of the date was that "one of the reasons" was the absence of John Maxwell, indisposed, in Scotland. The other members of the delegation, who would have presented a written "case," were to have been D. E. Griffiths, president of the Society, Sam Eckman, Jr., of MGM, J. C. Graham of Paramount and the secretary, Frank Hill. Present plans are that the fixture will be held in a week or two.

Unofficially, it had been understood that the K.R.S. would plead for a revision of the quota basis, on lines already detailed in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, enabling American companies to make a limited number of high priced British pictures at a total cost governed by their imported footage. It would be understandable, though it need not be assumed to be a fact, if American and British members of the Society found some difficulty in arriving at a formula covering their very different circumstances.

New Overbuilding Angle

The Licensing committee of the Middlesex County Council has established another new precedent in connection with the perpetual problem of "redundancy," or overbuilding. With an application to come before the committee for a license for a new Odeon at Tottenham, the committee sent delegates on a round of inspection of all the existing cinemas with an official of the County Engineer's Department to advise them. Apparently the tour convinced the Committee that these theatres were large enough, and modern enough, to cater to public needs. At any rate, they refused the license, which was required for a 2,000 seater of the luxurious type universal in the Oscar Deutsch circuit.

"All-Color in Four Years"

Walter Wanger lined up with those who prophesy the early death of the black and white film when he talked to the London press this week. "Color universal in four years" was his opinion, and he only set that limit because there simply wasn't enough equipment to let all producers go all-color sooner. He scoffed at the extra cost, saying it was what brought the extra takings, and he insinuated that those who doubted color were just repeating the arguments of those who doubted sound.

Wanger is talking about the setting for "Wuthering Heights" with his art director, Toluboff, while he is in London. Of his own definitely scheduled color features, "The Arabian Nights," he said, might not go on the floor until 1937.

Floated for the purpose of making seven British pictures for Columbia, at a cost of £25,000 and £30,000 apiece, Tudor Films, Ltd., has the Marquis of Ely as chairman and J. Elder Wills as the director of its first film, "Song of Love," with Gitta Alpar. New studios at Highbury in North London will be inaugurated with this film.

Charles Laughton, Vincent Korda and Joahnn de Meester, a specially engaged expert in Dutch art, have been touring Holland to study original backgrounds for London Films' "Rembrandt." Through the Corporation of Art Dealers in Amsterdam a great deal of period furniture has been obtained and an offer of six Rembrandts, which had to be rejected, owing to the difficulty of insurance coverage for their value, about £500,000.

To be seen for the first time in "Rembrandt" will be six English girls signed by Alexander Korda on long term "grooming" contracts. Peta Mannering, Wendy Weddell, and Marian Everall are brunettes; Nina Keech, Pamela Wood and Pat Law are blondes.

James A. Higler Dies

James A. Higler, theatre manager in Milwaukee for 37 years, died in that city this week. He was 63 years old. He had managed the Alhambra, Majestic and Palace and at the time of his death was manager of the Davidson.

Clarence Roessner Passes

Clarence Roessner, 46, former sales manager of Dalite Screen Company, died unexpectedly in Chicago this week of a heart attack.

INDEPENDENTS WIND UP PROGRAMS

Maurice Ostrer, director of administration. Among the planned films are three silent hits which will be remade as talking films: "Rob Roy," "Alf's Button" and "Owd Bob."

Gaumont British

Gaumont British, at whose convention at the Warwick hotel in New York May 22nd the delegates were told the company would release some 24 features in this country during the 1936-37 season, has signed John Loder to a term contract. He will be featured with Jessie Matthews in "Paris Love Song."

Grand National

Grand National Pictures has cancelled its distribution arrangement with Nate Schultz in Cleveland as of September 3rd, and will open its own exchange there. Indications are, at the present time, that Edward L. Alperson, president, will remain permanently in Hollywood to supervise the company's production activities.

Guaranteed

Under a deal closed last week with Maurice Conn, president of Ambassador Pictures, Guaranteed Pictures Company acquires all foreign distribution for the new 1936-37 series of Kermit Maynard's westerns.

Hoffberg

Jack H. Hoffberg has taken over "Voice of India" from Paul Hoefler for world distribution.

Master Arts

A new series of Organlogues, known as Popular Song Revues, presenting appropriate combinations of well known song hits, is being produced by Master Art for the state rights market. Jacques Kopfstein will handle world distribution. The first three issues have been completed.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Following the early announcement to delegates at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer convention at the Palmer House in Chicago May 11 that the company would have a lineup of from 44 to 52 features next year, comes word that Hal Roach has signed the Avalon Four and assigned them to "Girls, Go West," which features Patsy Kelly, Lyda Roberti and Rosina Lawrence. Roach has also promoted S. S. Van Keuren from production manager to vice-president in charge of production. Matt O'Brien, formerly vice-president and general manager, is now secretary-treasurer, taking over the duties of the late "Dad" Roach.

John W. Considine will produce from six to eight pictures for MGM next season, the producer revealed upon his arrival in New York from Europe last week. His first on the new list will be "Hats in the Air," starring Eleanor Powell.

Francis Marion has also been signed by the company to produce two pictures annually under a three-year contract.

Nuovo Mondo

Joseph Brandt, head of Nuovo Mondo Films, has returned to New York from Hollywood. While on the west coast he opened company offices in San Francisco, with Herbert Rosener and G. Tuoni in charge. Other branches have been established in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and New York. His company will release 26 features this season.

Paramount

Major Productions, headed by Emanuel Cohen and designed to produce a group of features to be included in the Paramount releasing setup for the 1936-37 season, revealed its personnel as well as executive setup this week. In addition to Mr. Cohen, the officers are: Ben Piazza, vice-president; Lloyd Wright, secretary, and Wilfred Pineau, treasurer. George Palmer Putnam is eastern editorial representative; Walter Schmidt, assistant editorial representative; Ernest Gann, eastern talent representative; Leonard Spiegelgass, scenario editor and Joseph Nadel, unit production manager.

Lou Diamond, head of Paramount's short subject department, leaves for Hollywood this week for conferences with producers of independently produced short subjects and also to hold auditions for musical compositions for publication by Popular Melodies, Inc., and Famous Music Corporation.

Jack Benny's contract with Paramount, which now provides for his appearance in "The Big Broadcast of 1937" and "College Holiday," has been extended to include a third picture. Lynne Overman has also been given a new long term contract.

Richard A. Rowland has signed Lewis Stone for the lead in the first of his series for Paramount, "I'd Give My Life," adapted from the stage play of George O'Neil and H. H. Van Loan. Tom Brown and Frances Drake have the juvenile leads.

Jack Cunningham, writer and laterly supervisor in the A. M. Botsford unit, has been raised to status of producer by William LeBaron. His first picture will be "The Tightwad" from a story by Paul Gallico.

Approximately nine pictures will be made by Paramount through independent producers in France, Italy and Spain next season, according to Fred W. Lange, managing director on the Continent who is now in New York. Six will be made at the Joinville studios in France, one in Italy and one or two in Spain.

B. P. Schulberg, through his new company, Schulberg Studios, Inc., has signed a long lease on the Prudential studio property in Hollywood. Plans are being rushed for the construction of a new administration building, star dressing rooms, and remodeling of stages. The new studio will house B. P. Schulberg Pictures, Inc., and the 16 pictures they will make for Paramount release will be made there.

Adolph Menjou has been signed by Paramount to a three-picture deal. His first will be "Wives Never Know" in which he will appear with Mary Boland and Charles Ruggles.

The studio has also signed Claudette Colbert to appear in seven pictures to be completed within a period of 30 months.

RKO Radio

Definitely discounting rumors that RKO would merge with any other company, Merlin H. Aylesworth, chairman of the board, last week told the sales force at its convention in New York at the Waldorf-Astoria, at which the men were told the company would release 54 features and 192 short subjects next season, that there was no truth to the stories in circulation.

Radio will make 22 "A" pictures next season, the delegates were informed by Ned E. Depinet, president of RKO Distributing Corporation. These films will be sold in important cities and to big circuits on the following percentage terms: two at 40 per cent, three at 35, five at 30 and 10 at 25 per cent. In smaller cities salesmen were advised to sell the top four against 40 per cent of the gross, or where a 50 per cent arrangement had been made previously to sell two at 50 per cent and two at 40. The next four are to be sold against 35 per cent of the gross and the next five against 30.

Directors Alfred Santell, George Stevens and George Nicholls, Jr., will remain on the company's roster, according to renewals of contracts which took place this week. At the same time it was revealed that the Hall Johnson Choir had been signed for a series of short subjects. Gordon Jones and Henry Stephenson have been obtained for roles in "Count Pete." Ann Sothern and Gene Raymond will play the top roles. Major G. O. T. Bagley, retired British army officer, is another to be signed by Radio, and he will act as technical advisor on "Gunga Din," to be produced by Edward Small.

Republic

In line with its construction policy, Republic has just completed a permanent revolving stage 75 feet in diameter at the Republic studios in Hollywood. For the sake of silence, the stage will be operated by hand winches instead of by

Company Copyrights Announcement Book, Carrying Gist of Each Story

The copyright of an original title for a motion picture in advance of the publication of the story or the production of the picture has been the cause of countless arguments in industry circles since the earliest days of the industry. It is a practice of the members of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., to abide by the decision of judgment of that organization as to the prior rights to any title, to register the title with the association. But, beyond the moral obligation to respect such prior registration, there seems to have been no agreement to an effective legal way of protecting the exclusive right to an original title prior to publication.

Burroughs-Tarzan Pictures, Inc., however, claims to have the solution to the entire problem by copyrighting its year book, in which not alone are the titles of their forthcoming releases set forth, but a thumb-nail sketch of the basic plot of each story is printed.

motors. Its first use will be in the Marion Talley picture, "Follow Your Heart."

Holding that the Gene Autrey-Republic Pictures contract was valid, the superior courts this week upheld an order restraining the western star from working for any other studio, making personal appearances or doing radio work outside the terms of the pact. The contract binds the star to the studio until 1940.

Independent Exhibitors, Inc., Boston, New England affiliate of Allied, has terminated its product contract with Republic. The pact had been in operation three years.

Revelation Pictures

Revelation Pictures, Inc., which has been incorporated in Delaware to produce and distribute sponsored advertising films in association with British interests, will have a working agreement with P. A. Powers' company, Celebrity Productions. The company expects to be able to offer advertisers 5,000 theatre accounts by fall.

Screen Classics, Inc.

Richard C. Kahn, L. M. Poole and John Hix have recently incorporated a new producing company in California under the name of Screen Classics, Inc., to produce shorts based on Hix's "Strange As It Seems" features in newspapers and radio.

Twentieth Century - Fox

Opening with "To Mary—With Love," the Twentieth Century-Fox release scheduled for the first quarter of 1936-37 season lists 16 pictures, as follows: "Sing, Baby, Sing," "Girls' Dormitory," "State Fair," a reissue, "Charlie Chan at the Racetrack," "The Holy Lie," "Alias Brian Kent," "The Road to Glory," "Ramona," "Pepper," "Pigskin Parade," "Ladies in Love," "Thank You Jeeves," "Ambassador Bill," a reissue, "The Bowery Princess," "See America First."

W. Scott Darling and David Silverstein have joined the company's writing department and it has been announced that Sol Wurtzel will produce the Lawrence Tibbett picture, "Love Flight," which John Stone will supervise and Otto Ludwig Preminger will direct.

Twickenham

National distribution for 16 features to be produced by Twickenham Studios in England will be arranged by Monty Morton, general sales manager now in New York. In addition to its own product, Twichenham is distributing 12 Chesterfield-Invincible features.

United Artists

Executives of the home office and the field of United Artists are converging on Hollywood this week where the company's annual sales convention will open its three-day term of sessions Monday. It is expected the delegates will be told the company will handle some 30-36 features next season.

En route from the home office are George J. Schaefer, Arthur W. Kelly, Harry D. Buckley, Harry Gold, Paul Lazarus, Monroe Greenthal, James Mulvey, Maurice Silverstone, Emanual Silverstone, John Flinn and Lowell Calvert.

Producers who will attend include Samuel Goldwyn, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, Jesse L. Lasky, Douglas Fairbanks, Alexander Korda, David O. Selznick, Walter Wanger, Walt Disney, Harry Goetz, Edward Small, John Hay Whitney.

Walt Disney was scheduled to deliver 18 pictures on the current season's program, but has delivered only one, "The Three Little Wolves," leaving 17 to come.

In discussing convention plans, Mr. Schaefer revealed that next year there will be no franchise deals and year-to-year contracts will be the policy.

The impression still persists that Pioneer Pictures and Selznick International will combine before the departure of John Hay Whitney from Hollywood following the convention and that the combination will release as a unit through United Artists with many of the pictures in color. In the new setup, Whitney will be chairman of the board, David O. Selznick president and Merian C. Cooper vice-president. All product will bear the Selznick trademark. The new company will have directors John Ford and George Cukor to direct three pictures, one of which, starring Ronald Colman, is in preparation.

Mundus Pictures, a United Artists subsidiary organized last year to distribute approximately 10 British-made pictures in this country, will not function next season and the company probably will be dissolved.

Universal

Universal studios, under the new setup effected in the past two months, are now geared to undertake the most elaborate type of picture, said Charles R. Rogers, vice-president in charge of production, at the closing session of the company's annual sales convention at the Hotel Astor on Broadway, at which it was announced that Universal would release 42 features and four serials. Steps taken in building up the producing staff were outlined by Mr. Rogers to the delegates.

The final talk of the convention was made by Robert H. Cochrane, president, who called the gathering "a convention without bunk," and characterized Rogers' production talk as "sincere, straightforward and containing the truth." Individual conferences between district and exchange managers and James R. Grainger, general sales manager, wound up the affair.

John Harkrider has been signed as wardrobe designer, supervisor of set construction and set designing by Mr. Rogers. At the same time it was announced that Universal will soon start construction of a new three-story building to house writers, publicity, casting and wardrobe departments.

Warner

Warner's western and southern sales convention concluded in Chicago last weekend with individual branch and district managers conferring with Gradwell Sears, western and southern general sales manager. Upon returning to their territories the district and branch managers will hold meetings with their respective sales forces on the new season's product.

Ralph Staub has returned to the Warner lot in Hollywood to produce another Technicolor short subject with music, "Echo Mountain." Fred Lawrence and Rosaline Marquis have the leading roles.

Mervyn LeRoy, upon his return to Hollywood from Europe, again revealed he is definitely determined to produce independently for Warner release following the production of "Three Men on a Horse." The deal will not be finally set until the arrival of Harry M. Warner in Hollywood late next month.

Fifteen pictures are now in various stages of work at the Company's Burbank studios. Seven before the cameras are "Cave In," "Three in Eden," "Polo Joe," "Way for a Pirate," "China Clipper," "Cain and Mabel," "The Charge of the Light Brigade." Eight in preparation are "Loudspeaker Lowdown," "Slim," "Another Dawn," "God's Country and the Woman," "Green Light," "Mistress of Fashion," "Mountain Justice" and "Three Men on a Horse."

Weiss Productions

Louis Weiss, head of Weiss Productions, Inc., has added William Nolte, Bob Lively and Betty Laidlaw to the staff of writers working on the script of "Phantom Island." The first serial the company will make for the new season will be "The Pony Express," and "The Black Coin," third serial on this season's list, goes into work July 7.

Police Renewing Moves Against Theatre Games

Basing their actions on a recent decision handed down by the appellate division of the New York supreme court, which held in the case of the Winthrop, Brooklyn, playing a Farmer Miller Game, that games were in violation of the lottery laws unless everyone was permitted to participate, District Attorney Charles Sullivan of Queens County and District Attorney Martin W. Littleton of Nassau County, have renewed campaigns against theatres featuring the various types of games.

This is a new phase which has never come up before and a new source of worry to independent exhibitors. In order to get around the appellate division ruling theatre men have been displaying blackboards in the lobbies so that non-patrons can join the games.

In Tampa, Fla., a declaration has been filed in the circuit court in connection with the claim of W. A. Rice to the $1,550 Bank Night award offered at the Tampa, May 1. The action is against Gulf Theatres, Inc., and the management claims at the time of the drawing Mr. Rice did not present himself in time to claim the prize. Rice denies this and is suing for $3,000.

Bank Night is no lottery in the state of Tennessee the supreme court there ruled last week and dismissed the suit against the Princess theatre of Columbus, Tenn. But, the Iowa state attorney's office at Des Moines has ruled that Bank Night as now being operated through an attendance card system in Des Moines is an illegal lottery. After two years of legal controversy the state supreme court there recently ruled the general Bank Night plan legal. Meanwhile, three state supreme court decisions expected to definitely determine the legality of Bank Night are expected in Mississippi, Texas and Missouri within a few days.

Bernhard Named Director

Joseph Bernhard, president and general manager of Warner theatre operations, was elected a director of Warner Brothers Pictures at a meeting of the board this week.

ALLIED TAKES UP ITS FUND RAISING FOR 'WAR CHEST' AGAINST CIRCUITS

Hopes to Collect $100,000 by July 15—New Jersey Allied Meets September 10; Rocky Mountain Group Elects Archer

Acting on the authority vested in it by the national convention in Cleveland, held last month, the war lords of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors gathered in New York's Warwick Hotel last weekend to devise the ways and means of raising $100,000 to $250,000 for a "war chest" with which to buy expensive legal talent to force the major producer-distributors out of exhibition, principally by means of state and federal legislation.

While Allied's leaders were so engaged at their favorite New York hotel meeting place, the rank and file of organized exhibitors in the field—both Allied affiliates and others—were proceeding with organization matters more intimately involving their operations.

In Boston, the Independent Exhibitors, Inc., Allied affiliate in New England, met on Tuesday and discussed the national fund, the Lloyds insurance plan which was developed nationally from there, and the local Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer selling and Paramount accessory situations.

Allied of New Jersey will have its annual convention in Atlantic City on September 10-11 instead of August 20-21, Lee Newbury, president, said this week following a meeting of the membership. The members felt that postponement until after Labor Day would result in better accommodations at the shore hotels. Sales policies and product of various companies for the new season were outlined generally, Mr. Newbury said.

The Theatre Owners and Managers of the Rocky Mountain Region, Inc., have been incorporated in Denver with directors including A. P. Archer, president of Civic Theatres; David Cockrill, Denham theatre manager; Charles Gilmore, president and manager of Gibraltar Enterprises; Burns Ellison, manager of the Rex and Federal theatres; Rick Ricketson, division manager for Fox Intermountain, Denver; David Davis, general manager of Atlas Theatres, all of Denver; B. P. McCormick, owner of several theatres in Canon City and Florence, Col., and Hot Springs, N. M.; Ed Schulte, owner of several Wyoming houses, Casper, Wyo.; T. B. Noble, Denver general manager for Westland Theatres; Charles Klein of Deadwood Amusement Company, Rapid City, S. D.; and Russell Hardwick, operator of houses in Clovis, N. M.

Archer Named President

At the meeting the following were elected: Mr. Archer, president; Harry Golub, first vice-president; Harold Rice, second vice-president; Louis Finske, third vice-president; Emmett Thurmon, secretary and counsel, and E. P. Briggs, treasurer.

The annual convention of the Kansas-Missouri Theatres Association has been postponed from June 23 and 24 to June 30 and July 1, in order that exhibitors in the area may hear Ed Kuykendall, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, who will be in Kansas City at that time. The convention will be held in the Variety Clubrooms.

Legislation, unfair competition of motion pictures presented in schools, double features and other matters were discussed at a meeting of the MPTO of the Northwest last week at the Hotel Davenport in Spokane, Wash. Hugh W. Bruen of Seattle presided.

Allied Seeks $100,000 by July 15

Detailed methods for raising Allied's proposed fund of $250,000 for carrying on a campaign to drive producers from exhibition and to help member exhibitors conduct litigation where it is deemed advisable were discussed at the conclave of leaders at the Hotel Warwick. It was stated that the committee hopes to raise $100,000 by July 15.

The action carried out a resolution passed at the recent Cleveland convention. Details of the proposed plan are to be mailed to all who made pledges at the convention.

In the meantime, an investigation is to be made of the legal aspects of the campaign and for drafting of proposed legislation to accomplish its objects. The commodities clause of the Hepburn act divorcing railroads from industries they serve and various state laws barring breweries from owning saloons are to be studied.

W. A. Steffes was elected chairman and H. M. Richey secretary.

Big Increase Indicated In Gaumont British Sales

American distribution on the Gaumont British 1936-37 program is expected to go 75 per cent over the current year according to George W. Weeks, general sales manager. The company's second year American sales were 100 per cent over the first year, he declared.

Supply Board To Meet

First meeting of the board of directors of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers' Association under the new administration will be held about the middle of November when the next convention date is scheduled to be set. The Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, will again be the meeting place.

Bernhard Is Director

Joseph Bernhard, general manager of the Warner Brothers Circuit, has been elected to the board of directors of Warner Brothers Pictures. Mr. Bernhard has an extensive background in real estate operations and was identified for some time with the Stanley Company of Philadelphia.

Western Electric Dividend

The board of directors of Western Electric has declared a dividend of 50 cents a share on the common stock, payable June 30 to stockholders of record on June 25.

English Versions Gain in Berlin

Interest in American and other foregin films in their original versions has been growing steadily in Berlin and other German cities, according to a report to the United States department of commerce. It is considered likely that the popularity of English language versions will continue to increase, and there may be less need for German dubbing.

Austria, too, is showing greater interest in original versions, particularly of American films, and prefer these, sometimes with subtitles, to the dubbed versions.

For some time the Marmorhaus theatre in Berlin has been showing first runs of American films in the original version, and recently the Krubel cinema decided to show exclusively films in the original text, or German films with French or English text.

This interest is attributed to Berlin's 100,000 foreign population and the large number of Germans who understand English or French.

Furthermore, English is the preferred foreign language in the German high schools, and many teachers consider that motion pictures in English is the best and cheapest way of acquainting students with the language.

Legion Classifies 15 Current Pictures

Of 15 new pictures reviewed and classified in the list of the National Legion of Decency for the current week, 12 were called unobjectionable for general patronage and three were classed as unobjectionable for adults. None of the pictures reviewed were noted as objectionable in part or whole. The new films and their classifications follow:

Class A-1, "Unobjectionable for General Patronage": "Anna und Elisabeth," "And Sudden Death," "Counterfeit," "Der Vetter Aus Dingsda," "Guns and Guitars," "Navy Born," "Parole," "Poppy," "Romeo and Juliet," "Stampede," "Trapped by Television," "Winds of the Wasteland," Class A-2, "Unobjectionable for Adults"; "Alpine Love," "I Stand Condemned," "Women Are Trouble."

Lesser's Son in Films

Julian Lesser has returned to Hollywood with his father Sol Lesser, to enter the motion picture business. The youth was graduated from Stanford University in Palo Alto, Cal., last week.

Contract Given Benedict

A new two-year contract has been signed by Howard S. Benedict, Radio studio publicity head in California.

COLUMBIA ANNOUNCES 58 FEATURES FOR '36-37 AT SALES CONVENTION

WHEN 250 OF COLUMBIA'S SALES FORCE MASSED FOR THEIR NEW SEASON CAMPAIGN

Two Frank Capra Productions and 16 Westerns Among Pictures Listed at Gathering of 250 of Selling Staff in Chicago

Columbia Pictures will produce 58 features for release during 1936-37, the assembled sales force was told this week at the annual convention, in the Drake Hotel on Chicago's Lake Shore Drive. Sixteen will be westerns, in two series of eight each.

A highlight of the Monday session was the further revelation that the company will have two Frank Capra productions on the new lineup.

Abe Montague, general sales manager, presided at the sales gathering, assisted by Jack Cohn, who led the New York home office contingent, and Harry Cohn, who came on from Hollywood. Both brothers remain in Chicago until the week-end to confer with branch and division managers on future policies and campaigns.

Some 250 delegates registered at the Drake Hotel for the convention.

Columbia's short subject lineup breaks down into eight series of one-reelers and three series of two-reelers. The latter will bulk 26 releases, but the distributor does not designate how many in each:

Three Stooge comedies, starring the comedy team of that name.

All-Star comedies with Polly Moran and El Brendel as the leads, supported by film, stage and radio players.

There will be eight series of one-reelers, but again the number in each series is not indicated, nor does it appear in the company's work sheet.

"The Court of Human Relations," a new series based on stories in True Story Magazine and other Macfadden Publications and the radio program of the same name.

Color Rhapsodies in Technicolor, cartoon series produced by Charles B. Mintz.

Scrappy cartoons, also made by Charles B. Mintz.

Krazy Kat cartoons, third series from the same producer.

New Screen Snapshots with Harriet Parsons as commentator.

News World of Sports.

Columbia Tours, travel series in color.

Columbia Featurettes, featuring songs, stars and production numbers.

Jack Cohn Opens Convention

Jack Cohn, following an introduction by Mr. Montague, opened the convention and welcomed the delegates. Harry Cohn was next on the speakers rostrum and he was followed again by the general sales manager who gave a general discussion of the currently released product and wound up with a report on future pictures. Addresses by other sales and home office executives followed.

An announcement of particular importance was the decentralization of exploitation effort, similar in principle to the decentralization policy now being sponsored by the company's sales department. The new plan will be put into effect with the start of the new season.

Immediately after the convention details are all cleared, the company's field exploitation force, which makes its headquarters in key cities throughout the country, will leave for an extended tour of the respective territories it covers, and all radio stations, newspapers, editors, exhibitors and others in the various districts will be contacted. This method virtually establishes an exploitation department, operating as a single unit, in each key city.

Columbia will continue its plan to hold divisional meetings three times a year with sales district managers and salesmen, it was announced by Mr. Montague, who said, "We have found it decidedly constructive to hold divisional meetings three times a year and the results have been a greater, finer and closer understanding of each other's problems. We tried during the past year to put into effect a new policy, to meet more often with all of you, and we have found this policy most beneficial."

Joe McConville, sales supervisor, Monday awarded prizes to the winners in the "Pre-Convention Round-Up." First prize for the best records in sales, billings, collections and general performance went to Buffalo, managed by Joe Miller; second to Los Angeles, W. C. Riter, manager, and third to Omaha, B. C. Marcus, manager.

Eight Series of One-Reel Subjects and Three Series of Two Reelers Planned; Decentralizing Exploitation Planned

The division managers' trophy was won for the second time by the western division, headed by Jerome Safron. The branches which won the awards for the biggest sales of accessories in their territories were: eastern, Buffalo; mideast, Pittsburgh; central, Indianapolis; southern, Dallas; Midwest, St. Louis; western, Denver.

Awards for billings and sales of shorts went to: eastern, Buffalo; mideast, Philadelphia; central, Cleveland; southern, Dallas; midwest, Milwaukee; western, San Francisco.

Bookings awarded were won by: eastern, New York; mideast, Washington; central, Chicago; southern, Atlanta; midwest, Milwaukee; western, Portland.

The following salesmen won prizes for leading their territories in sales, billings and general performance: eastern, J. Bullwinkel, Buffalo; mideast, G. B. Kosco, Pittsburgh; central, L. Zucker, Cleveland; southern, J. J. Fabacher, New Orleans; midwest, C. S. Ferris, St. Louis; western, H. M. Lentz, Los Angeles.

Managers of the following branches won prizes for best showing in their divisions: eastern, Boston; mideast, Washington; central, Indianapolis; southern, New Orleans; midwest, Omaha; western, San Francisco.

Columbia has some fifty-odd players under contract, either for a series of features, or for merely one or two. These, and those featured players, are as follows:

Grace Moore
Ronald Colman
Bing Crosby
Irene Dunne
Jean Arthur
Ralph Bellamy
Jane Wyatt
Douglas Dumbrille
Isabel Jewell
Melvyn Douglas

She Married the Prince, from the Ladies Home Journal story by Alice Duer Miller.

You're In Love, from the story by William Rankin and Jerry Sackheim.

There will also be eight Peter B. Kyne westerns starring Charles Starrett as well as a like number starring Bob Allen. Eight Buck Jones westerns are scheduled also for re-release.

Columbia now has 10 features now in work, some of which will be completed early enough for release late this month and during July.

In the group to be released this month are: "The Final Hour," with Ralph Bellamy and Marguerite Churchill; "Blackmailer," with William Gargan and Florence Rice. For probable release next month are "Shakedown," with Lew Ayres and Joan Perry, and "Meet Nero Wolfe," starring Edward Arnold and featuring Lionel Stander, Joan Perry and Victory Jory.

Others in various stages of production are: "Adventure in Manhattan," starring Jean Arthur, with Joel McRea; "Craig's Wife," with John Boles and Rosalind Russell; "I Promise to Pay," featuring Leo Carrillo, Marian Marsh and George Bancroft; "There Goes the Bride," with Chester Morris and Fay Wray; "The Fighter," with James Dunn and June Clayworth; "Find the Witness," featuring Marguerite Churchill.

Carl Laemmle Is Guest at United Palestine Dinner

The ceremonies marking the retirement from motion pictures of Carl Laemmle came to a climax on Monday evening when the former founder and owner of Universal Pictures was the guest of honor at a dinner at New York's Waldorf-Astoria Hotel given under the sponsorship of the United Palestine Appeal to aid Jewish refugees in Germany and Poland.

Messages of tribute including one from President Roosevelt were sent to the film pioneer from leaders in the motion picture industry, the theatre, and public life adding to the tribute paid to him by the more than 500 of his friends and business associates who were present.

Mr. Laemmle's many philanthropies and his patriotic work during the World War were stressed by the speakers. This point was emphasized particularly by Nathan Straus, chairman of the New York campaign of the Palestine Appeal, who announced that proceeds of the dinner would go to aid the Jewish refugees.

William A. Brady, old friend of Mr. Laemmle, recalled the retiring executive's generosity during the war. He told how he overcame difficulties in 1917 to get 10,000,000 feet of film into Europe as pictorial evidence of America's aid to her Allies, heartening the morale of the stricken countries while war preparations were being hastened. He characterized the Universal founder as "a man and a hero."

Mr. Laemmle, in acknowledging the tribute paid him by all the speakers, told how he had started in the film industry with $3,000 and had come out with $4,000,000.

"And now I am glad to be able to lay aside the cares of business," he said. "I will never again be active in pictures. The motion picture industry has made great strides and now is on a good footing with every prospect of a prosperous future."

On the dais beside the guest of honor were Jack Alicoate, William A. Brady, Jules Brulatour, Gene Buck, Howard Conklin, Judge Jonah J. Goldstein, Siegfried Hartman, Austin Keough, Major Henry Adam Proctor, Martin Quigley, Terry Ramsaye, Morris Rothenberg, Louis K. Sidney, Nathan Straus and Mrs. William Dick Storborg.

Louis Nizer presided and Harry Hershfield was toastmaster. An entertainment program was arranged by Louis K. Sidney with Milton Berle, Jay C. Flippen, Cross and Dunn, Harriet Hilliard, Joan Marsh, George O'Brien, George Raft, Pat Rooney, John Steel, Ed Sullivan and Alice White.

Before Mr. Laemmle was introduced the Grand Ballroom took on the atmosphere of an old nickelodeon and "Hiawatha," the pioneer's first film was projected on the screen. This was followed by bits from "Showboat."

The dinner was arranged by a committee headed by Will Hays, president of the Society of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors.

Mr. Laemmle sailed later this week on the Queen Mary for an extended vacation.

Taxes and Permits Engage Trade in Czechoslovakia

by HARRY KNOPF
in Prague

Koruna Films are representing Columbia here, and they are going to produce a new picture called "Father Kondelik."

Francis Lederer has been made an honorary member of the Czechoslovak Film Union.

In April the Czechoslovak censor saw 270,000 feet of film.

The Film Advisory Board, the Ministry of Commerce and the Ministry of Finance are conducting negotiations on a familiar problem—the possibility of getting a reduction in entertainment tax for cinemas.

Ant. Vaverka, Czechoslovak actor, has been offered the role of Emperor Francis Joseph in "Attentat" (Assassination). The player has had Hollywood experience, where he was invariably cast as the Austrian Emperor.

The new Bata Studio, intended chiefly for cultural and propaganda films, is nearly completed and will open in July. Built in the vicinity of Zlin, home of the Bata shoe factories, the studio has three big floors, together with its own laboratories, offices and dressing rooms. Recording equipment is on the way from America, where a group of technicians have been studying film conditions.

The Czechoslovak censor will be on vacation from July 27 to August 18, during which period no films other than newsreels will be censored.

Shooting is completed on Binovec's "Cavalry Patrol" at Barrandov, the picture moving to the cutting room. Karl Lamac has finished exteriors of "On a Green Meadow." The scenario is ready for Slavia's "Street Girl," which Vladimir Slavinsky will direct.

Final details of the decision of the CSR Film Advisory Board and Ministry of Commerce on registration of film importers show that 26 were registered, 7 will receive occasional permits, 5 have to wait for a final decision, and 13 others will be unlucky.

A surprise hit of the season here is "The Whole Town's Talking," which has been booked, so far, for 26 weeks.

New plans for organizing credits for home production and the question of film taxation are major problems before the Czechoslovak Film Advisory Board, temporarily pushing the trade show exchange scheme and discussion on block and blind booking into the background. The plan now being considered is for the Ministry of Finance to guarantee credits of ten million kroner (£1,000) for home production, in order to encourage domestic enterprise.

New York Minors Law Ready for Enactment

Mayor F. H. LaGuardia of New York this week is expected to sign the local law permitting unescorted minors to attend motion picture shows at certain hours under specified conditions.

The board of aldermen and the board of estimate branch of the municipal assembly have approved the bill, which received the support of exhibitors and organizations interested in child welfare.

In conformance with a recently enacted state law, the New York ordinance provides that children between the ages of eight and 16 may attend film shows without an escort provided they are seated in a segregated section where no adults are permitted. It also provides that matrons licensed by the health department be stationed in each theatre.

Eastman Gain Seen

The report of Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, for the first 24 weeks of its current fiscal year, to be issued in August, is expected to show the highest net income for any comparable period since semi-annual reports began.

Jensen-Von Herberg In Union Agreement

After several years of non-union operation, in Seattle, during which their theatres have been picketed and otherwise attacked, Jensen-Von Herberg have come to terms with the Seattle projectionists' union.

Effective this week, the circuit will employ all union operators and other employes in the Liberty, Bagdad, Venetian and Roxy. The signing of the agreement means that all Seattle circuits are now completely unionized, Danz's Sterling group and Hamrick-Evergreen having used union men for several seasons.

Montana Theatre Remodeled

The Oasis theatre, Columbus, Mont., enlarged and modernized, reopened last Thursday with the showing of "The Trail of the Lonesome Pine." Ted Stump is the owner and manager.

Milder in New York

Max Milder, managing director of Warner Brothers Pictures, Ltd., of England, arrived in New York this week on the Queen Mary to confer with home office executives.

Tax on U.S. Actors Abroad Explained

The taxable position of American actors who accept motion picture contracts or stage engagements abroad has been explained to Actors Equity Associaiton by the United States treasury department. The request for the information was at the behest of the British Actors Equity. The treasury department wrote Frank Gillmore, president of Equity, as follows:

"Your attention is directed to Article 11-2 of Regulations 86, pertaining to the income tax under the Revenue Act of 1934, which reads in part:

"Citizens or residents of the United States liable to tax. . . . In general, citizens of the United States, wherever resident, are liable to the tax, and it makes no difference that they may own no assets within the United States and may receive no income from sources within the United States. * * *"

"One of the exceptions to this general rule of liability to tax is provided by section 116 of the Act which provides in part:

"In addition to the items specified in section 22 (b), the following items shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation under this title:

"(a) Earned Income from Sources Without United States.—In the cases of an individual citizen of the United States, a bona fide non resident of the United States for more than six months during the taxable year, amounts received from sources without the United States (except amounts paid by the United States or any agency thereof) if such amounts would constitute earned income as defined in Section 25 (a) if received from sources within the United States; but such individual shall not be allowed as a deduction from his gross income any deductions properly allocable to or chargeable against amounts excluded from gross income under this subsection.

"The place where the services are rendered is the source of the income. Consequently the compensation for services rendered abroad is earned income from sources without the United States. Under the above quoted provision of law, a citizen of the United States who is an actor, and who is away from the United States for more than six months of the taxable year is not required to include in his gross income the salary or other compensation he receives for his services rendered without the United States. If, however, an actor is away from the United States, for less than six months of the taxable year, he is taxable upon the salary he received for the services rendered abroad in the same manner as if he had remained in the United States.

"It is assumed that by the phrase 'American actor who goes abroad' you do not mean an American actor who goes to a possession of the United States, as Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, etc. There are special provisions of the income tax law which are applicable to citizens of the United States working in a possession of the United States."

"Adverse" Run Set

"Anthony Adverse" opens at the Carthay Circle theatre in Hollywood July 8 on a two-a-day basis at advanced prices. "Green Pastures" follows its run on the same policy.

J. C. JENKINS--HIS COLYUM

Independence, Kansas

Dear Herald:

On our way down here from Abilene we stopped to visit Ole Bratton and his father, who operate the Stella theatre at Council Grove. Mr. Bratton has commenced to remodel his theatre and we judge from the plans that the Stella will be one of the up-to-date theatres of the state.

We presume that few people know of the early history of Council Grove. At one time Council Grove was located at the point "where the west begins." It was here the first white child was born in Kansas. The first school for white children in Kansas was built here and it was here that the famous Santa Fe trail began, and in a little park at the east end of Mainstreet the daughters of the G. A. R. erected a monument of a woman and a child and christened it "The Madonna of The Trail."

At the south side of the town stands a large oak tree which is called the Council Oak, and it was under this tree that the United States commissioners met the chiefs of the Osage Indian tribe and "smoked the pipe of peace."

It was at this point that General Custer gathered his cavalry the night before they started to go and fight Sitting Bull and his warring tribe of Indians on the bank of the Big Horn river in Wyoming, and it was in this battle with Sitting Bull that the General and his entire cavalry were wiped out, and the place is known as Custer's Battle Feld. We have seen this battle field and noted the dozens of crosses erected there to show where each soldier fell and the cluster of crosses around the spot where Custer was killed.

Some people writing of this battle criticise the General for having been drawn into ambush, but General Custer was a brave man and he made a gallant fight and we honor him and say, "Three cheers for General Custer."

During the civil war Kansas was a buffer state between slavery and freedom, and it was here that many a bloody battle was fought and that is why she is called "Bleeding Kansas," and don't forget this, Kansas has furnished this nation with many prominent people who do things. Medicine Lodge was the home of Carrie Nation, and she, with her hatchet, made a fight against the liquor traffic, and, whether you like it or not, she placed Medicine Lodge on the map and Kansas in the forefront against the evils of the effects of rum. But let's get away from that.

Neodesha is the home of ex-Governor Woodring, and Neodesha is also the town wherein Mr. Klock operates the Klock theatre. We called on him today and found him busy remodeling the Gem theatre into a swell cafe. This will make Neodesha a place to see a good show and also to get a good meal at reasonable prices.

Today we drove through mile after mile of wheat fields that we are convinced will yield fifty bushels of wheat per acre and next week the harvest will begin, and that will make it tough on the relief boys around the pool halls. And don't forget this also, that Kansas furnishes this nation with a large part of its bread. If not, then we don't know Kansas, and we don't know the nation's appetite for biscuits.

This town of Independence has something like 15,000 Jayhawkers, and if it has a jail we didn't see it. She does have a beautiful park and a lot of lovely homes and some very fine business buildings. Not only that, she has four theatres, all of them doing a good business. The Baldorf is a very fine theatre operated by W. H. Wagner, Jr., and we had a very delightful visit with him. Mr. Wagner was recently assistant casting director for one of the film companies in Hollywood but he gave up the job to come back to Independence and operate the Baldorf. Here we met Reed Porter, publicity man for the Baldorf and other theatres. Mr. Porter is also a colyumnist on one of the papers and a general reporter of important events for other papers. We were very glad to meet him, and, like ourself, he probably likes the smell of printers' ink and our guess is that that boy will make a success at anything he undertakes.

The Best theatre is operated by John Tar, Jr., with whom we passed a very delightful hour. The Best at one time was known as the Snark and the Snark was the famous playhouse for the big companies playing Kansas. Henrietta Crossman and her company played there, Eddie Foy, Lou Dockstader and many other famous theatrical stars played there, but since then the name Snark has been changed to Best. Here we met M. S. Boner, a reporter for the Daily Independent Reporter, and Lawrence Kelly, assistant manager of the Best. These boys all agreed to furnish us bail if we needed it, but we slipped through without having to furnish any.

This is the former home of Martin Johnson, the man who gets us pictures of elephants, tigers, snakes, lions, alligators, natives and other fauna in South Africa and along the Elkhorn river in Nebraska, but somehow he always missed getting ours, although we are a native of those jungles. Independence is also the home of former Governor Pawlen and of Governor Alf Landon, and you have heard of Alf Landon, haven't you? Well, you will, or else we are going to lose some money. Maybe we like Independence because it was in Independence and the Snark theatre where our son-in-law, Walt Bradly, learned the theatre business on the Snark stage while he was wearing breech-clouts and a dirty face and ears and selling popcorn and running errands for the stars, and he hasn't washed his face or run any since, but he does operate a theatre in our home town.

Should the editor of the Emporia Gazette say again "What's the Matter With Kansas?" you can reply and say, "Nothing, Not a Damthing." And as you gaze at the setting sun over these vast wheat fields you can repeat Opie Reade, "Shades of evening twilights, gathered from the slopes of long ago." That's Kansas.

Have any of you boys got a remedy for removing corns? We've tried Old Dutch Cleanser, stove polish, Bon-Ami and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with very poor results and if we don't get rid of 'em pretty soon we are going to take the matter up with Jim Farley. Jim's remedy for removing postmasters ought to remove corns.

Union, Missouri

We don't very often get sore unless we've got something to get sore about, but we are pertty doggone sore right now and it's nobody's fault but our own, therefore we can't kick. We have been driving the Ozark hills in southern Missouri for two days trying to find a theatre and have been able to find only two. We found a lot of towns, but the most of them were like some Nebraska towns—a post office, a filling station, a garage, a hot dog emporium and what else have you.

This would be a beautiful country to drive if you were out for pleasure only. These hills are simply gorgeous and especially so when the foliage starts to turn in the fall, but if you go out looking for towns we would advise you to travel north of the Missouri river, although if you want to meet mighty fine people that will treat you royally you can find them in the Ozarks. We have been traveling the Ozarks now for two days and are still in 'em.

Over at Chaney, Kansas, we met the manager of the Liberty theatre and had a short but very pleasant visit with him, but we failed to set his name down. Chaney, Kansas, is within about a mile of the Oklahoma line and just over in Oklahoma is Claremore and Claremore was the home town of the late beloved Will Rogers.

At Osage, Kansas, is where H. H. Daniels operates the Nu Era theatre. There may be some of you who don't know about the Nu Era theatre, but we doubt if there are any of you who don't know about H. H. He's a Kansas Jayhawker who knows how to operate a theatre and most of the folks have come to understand where to go to see a good show. We met our old friend Jerome J. McCarty at the Nu Era and had a very pleasant visit with him. J. J. used to sell film out of Kansas City but is now engaged in another line, but he's the same J. J. of old.

Charles Lancaster operates the Uptown at Strong City and Strong City seems to be mighty proud of its theatre and the manager.

A. W. Pugh gives the people of Fredonia the best there is to be had in pictures at the Whiteway theatre, and the Whiteway seems to be the rallying place of Fredonia, which is particularly due to the convenience of the theatre but largely to the popularity of A. W. Kansas has got a lot of good ones.

You should go to Columbus and meet H. W. Huston of the Liberty theatre. H. W. was showing "The Country Doctor" when we called and it was quite evident, the way they turned out, that the whole town is strong for babies. Slim Summerville, who played the part of the marshal, reminded me very much of the marshal in our own town. He made an awful good marshal but he wouldn't arrest anybody, neither would ours. What the samhill does a town want with a marshal, anyhow?

A fellow came diving in from a side-road today and we slammed on the brakes in time to miss him. He stopped and said to us, "Say, Old Man, don't you know how to drive a car yet? If you wasn't an old man and would get out of that car I'd mop up the road with you." We opened the door of the car and stepped out and said, "Say, you lousy hillbilly, we have a very obliging disposition and if you are serious in what you say and will get out of that car we will proceed to work you over and, when we get through with you, we will promise you that you will look like something the cat drug in." Then we got back in the car and hurried away, for fear that guy would get out. We had the satisfaction of telling that hammerhead something, anyhow.

When you go down to Baxter Springs you will see great mounds of sand and gravel everywhere you look and as far as you can see. These are not anthills, but they are mountains of earth taken out of the lead and zinc mines, for, listen Abner, around Baxter Springs is mined something like 65% of all the lead and zinc in this country, and Baxter Springs is located right in the heart of the whole works.

J. W. Granthum, who operates the Baxter theatre, lives in Galena, a few miles from Baxter Springs, and we drove over there to meet him, but he had gone back to his theatre, but we did meet Mrs. Granthum and had a very lovely visit with her and her relatives. They have a lovely home, situated in a large grove of timber on the bank of the river, and there is probably where J. W. does the most of his fishing. He can walk down to the bank of the river at the lower end of his flower garden and pull out catfish as long as a sled tongue. That's just the kind of a place we'd like to live. We drove back to Baxter to see J. W. and he tried to hold us over and said he'd show us through the mines and mills, but we couldn't stop, because if there is anything we hate to do is to stop working, but maybe we'll go back there some time. Who knows?

S. L. George of the Mountain Home theatre, Mountain Home, Idaho; Fred Erickson of the Gem theatre at Filler, Idaho; John Cosner of the Sun theatre, Sargent, Nebraska; Joe Lucas of the State at Central City, Nebraska, and Ray Hingst of the Emmerson at Emmerson, Nebraska, all sent us checks and requested that we renew their subscriptions to the HERALD.

All right, boys, and thanks. We have already sent your checks to Denny Shea of the HERALD and Denny will take care of the matter for you. That's just the way it is with these theatre boys; none of them want to be without the HERALD, for it covers the field like an April shower.

If April Shower is able to travel in the morning we are going to get out of these hills.

Down at Neosho Missouri, we met our old friend Hugh Gardner of the Gardner theatre. We wouldn't miss Hugh unless we thought he'd want us to play golf with him. But Hugh says he doesn't play golf any more. They have two lovely babies, one seventeen months old and the other one about two weeks, and Hugh puts in his spare time looking after these babies. You betcha, we would too. Hugh was having a standout business when we called and we understand that it is a common thing. Neosho is a lovely place and Hugh's theatre is the pride of the town. There is one thing about the theatre that Hugh ought to correct, but then he knows that already.

Over at Carthage, Missouri, we met Mr. Williams, Jr., of the Delphos theatre. We would have liked to have met his father, Pet Williams, but didn't do so. "Pet" Williams, as he is called, is probably the best known theatrical man in Missouri. It seems like everybody knows Pet Williams, about the same as everybody knows Bert Silver of Greenville, Michigan. Bert and Pet ought to be harnessed up together; they would make a great team. Young Mr. Williams isn't so slow either.

We drove all day to get down to Willow Springs to meet Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Sass, who operate the Star theatre, and we were glad we went because we met two delightful folks. They said they wondered if we would ever get down there to see them. If they will move up north-west about six hundred miles we will go and see them often.

The time we were in Missouri before, we stopped at a town to stay over night and that evening the colored girls of the Methodist church were giving a chicken pie supper, so we went up to the church to have some chicken pie and when the colored girl brought us our supper she stood behind us until the head waitress came around and said to her, "Come 'long here Mandy and tend to business and don't stan' thar and watch that genneman eat that chicken, for he haint going to leave nuthin' but the bones nohow."

Well, anyhow, if you should read this be sure to leave the bones.

Foreign Theatre Business Reported as Excellent

The motion picture industry is enjoying better business than any other field in the Orient, the Near East, North Africa, the British Isles and continental Europe, George Barnett, president of Modern Film Sales Corporation, reported this week on his return from an eight months' business trip around the world. Foreign countries, particularly in the Far East are working hard on native productions, he declared. "Good American pictures will always get big grosses but the weaker ones will be supplanted by the native product," he predicted.

H. W. Chotiner Dies

Harry W. Chotiner, 50, prominent exhibitor of Los Angeles and past president of the Independent Theatre Owners there, died last weekend. At the time of his death he was operating three Los Angeles theatres. Several of his former houses are now Fox West Coast properties.

New Theatre for Cuba

Construction has begun on a new motion picture theatre at Marianao, to be known as the Cine Roxy. The house will be the largest in Cuba outside of Havana.

WHAT THE PICTURE DID FOR ME

GRAND EXIT: Edmund Lowe, Ann Sothern—Very good. Above average program picture. The title somewhat misleading.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

HELL SHIP MORGAN: George Bancroft, Ann Sothern—The title certainly will not find favor with the ladies. Business below average. Rough and tough mediocre program stuff. Too bad when we remember Bancroft as he was in the big Paramount productions. Played May 22.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

IF YOU COULD ONLY COOK: Jean Arthur, Herbert Marshall—Good average entertainment that gave me the poorest Friday-Saturday I have had in the past four months. I advertised this plenty but couldn't create any interest in the box office. It looks like Columbia hasn't come through this year with the possible exception of "Deeds," which I haven't played yet.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

WESTERN COURAGE: Ken Maynard, Geneva Mitchell—Fine western. Pleased everyone and did nice business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 14-16.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Empire

LONE BANDIT, THE: Lane Chandler, Doris Brook—Just fair. Ordinary western. Ordinary business. Running time, 60 minutes. Played June 12-13.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

First National

CAPTAIN BLOOD: Erroll Flynn, Olivia De Havilland—From the standpoint of blood and thunder adventure drama plus romance, this is tops. This did not draw for us, in fact business was below average. I believer the trailer on this hurt business. A few disjointed scenes of battles, duels, pirate ships in action, the branding iron, etc., instead of attracting, repels business. Scenes of cruelty as a rule repel women customers who are the mainstay of the motion picture business.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

CEILING ZERO: James Cagney, Pat O'Brien—As a rule James Cagney draws well at his theatre. "Ceiling Zero" drew decidedly below average. Low business usually makes us a little more critical. At best, this is cheerless fare. The death of Stuart Erwin is about as long a drawn out a death scene as I can recall. Usually when the hero is in peril of his life the audience hopes against hope that he will cheat death. In this case he crashes in flames, then the hope is raised that he may recover in the hospital, but after more suspense the report comes of his death. To add to that, there is the death of James Cagney, also. It is all well done but they did not come to see it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

GOLDEN ARROW, THE: Bette Davis, George Brent—This lady may be an Academy Award winner, or what have you, but to my box office she is an aching void to the money drawer. Played June 4.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

ROAD GANG: Donald Woods, Kay Linaker—Not very pleasant entertainment dealing with the road gangs and the whipping that goes with them. It was a little too realistic for some of our audience. They don't like that sort of thing.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni—An exceedingly good picture that should be seen by everyone but—and a big but, too—the cash customers just didn't seem to go for this one. Most of the prospective patrons would walk up and take one look at the posters, then turn around and walk out. This is one of those artistic successes but box office flops. Played May 30.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

STORY OF LOUIS PASTEUR, THE: Paul Muni, Josephine Hutchinson—A wonderful picture, interesting story, excellent cast, in fact everything a picture needs but box office appeal. Paul Muni gives the best performance in this one, Josephine Hutchinson is very good but they just will not go for this kind of a show. It seems to me they couldn't have selected a worse title for the box office. Then, the trailer didn't help sell the show. Think most of the very few who came were pleased with the show, although I had a few walkouts. Unless the producers get over the idea that people want to be educated, I will be the poorest dressed woman in the bread line. 95 per cent of the cash customers come to a show to be amused and for no other reason. A mighty good show that took a nose dive. Running time, 87 minutes. Played May 23-24.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

IN this, the exhibitors' own department, the theatremen of the nation serve one another with information on the box office performance of product for their mutual benefit. It is a service of the exhibitor for the exhibitor. Address all communications to—

What the Picture Did for Me

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Rockefeller Center, New York

GB Pictures

MISTER HOBO: George Arliss—Our house is patronized by people who like action and western pictures. Yet we had more comment (all good) on this picture than any picture played in months. No draw, but glad we played it. Running time, 84 minutes. Played June 10-11.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

TRANSATLANTIC TUNNEL: Richard Dix, Madge Evans—A very good British production which did below average business.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

Mascot

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL: William Haines, Judith Allen—Played on Bargain Night and it satisfied.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

AH, WILDERNESS!: Wallace Beery, Lionel Barrymore—Just a picture. Drew 15 per cent below average business.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

BOHEMIAN GIRL, THE: Laurel and Hardy—For those who like Laurel and Hardy this picture is a wow. For those who don't, well it's not so good. Did better than average business here. Played June 2.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

EXCLUSIVE STORY: Franchot Tone, Madge Evans, Stuart Erwin—A swell picture. One of the best gangster pictures I have run. Franchot Tone, Madge Evans and Stuart Erwin is a trio that is hard to beat for real down-to-earth entertainment. A number of patrons remarked that Stuart Erwin reminded them of Will Rogers. He is becoming very popular. Running time, 73 minutes. Played June 3-4.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lehanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

KIND LADY: Aline MacMahon, Basil Rathbone—I have played worse but I can't remember when. There is absolutely nothing to say about this except that it is Metro's error for releasing such a vehicle. 90 per cent of the audience had thumbs down on it. Second day no business at all.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

LAST OF THE PAGANS: Mala, Lotus Long—This picture was a great surprise to me. Business pretty good and picture certainly pleased. Would be good even for Saturday night. See that Republic is planning on putting Mala in "Robinson Crusoe." He will be plenty good is my bet.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clark Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—This did not do a thing for me. Did not draw or please as well as "Captain Blood."—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MUTINY ON THE BOUNTY: Clarke Gable, Charles Laughton, Franchot Tone—An outstanding cast and great story. Reports that the picture was brutal may have kept some of the weaker sex away, but it still drew far better than the average. Running time, 133 minutes. Played May 24-25.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

O'SHAUGHNESSY'S BOY: Wallace Beery, Jackie Cooper—Good picture. No business.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—Two excellent marquee names and a drawing title, but business below average. No doubt the advance word of mouth advertising preceded it. Several walkouts, and I was among them. Played June 2-3.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

PETTICOAT FEVER: Robert Montgomery, Myrna Loy—A light, frothy comedy that went over fair here and seemed to satisfy the cash customers. Played June 6.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

RENDEZVOUS: William Powell, Rosalind Russell—Newcomer Rosalind Russell and old timer William Powell produce an entertainment from very little at all which is something that the film industry has perfected. Good six day booking for industrial center who like William Powell (and who doesn't?). Played six days.—Wilfred G. Brown, Regal Theatre, Barrow-in-Furness, Lancashire, England. General patronage.

TALE OF TWO CITIES, A: Ronald Colman, Elizabeth Allan—Good picture, but they didn't come to see it.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

THREE GODFATHERS: Chester Morris, Irene Hervey——A stupid, no-account effort, top-heavy with gruesome desert suffering that patrons detest looking at. Business below average and nobody pleased. Played June 4.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

THREE GODFATHERS: Lewis Stone, Chester Morris, Irene Hervey—This is the old "Three Bad Men" again under a different title. As I remember it, it is identically the same, the three men bad clear through and the baby that they found and died for. The picture is well produced and acted as it was in the former version. It will hold interest. But seeing it the second time it did seem that the crossing of the desert scenes could have been speeded up and helped the picture. My records show that this same picture has been produced three times, once silent and now twice in sound. That's enough.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

UNGUARDED HOUR, THE: Loretta Young, Franchot Tone—A dried out, hackneyed English story with an extra heavy sprinkling of that so-called English dialect. Business poor. Played May 26-27.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—This picture was well attended and gave satisfaction. However, the sound was poor and at times my equipment was taxed to its utmost. Why don't you fellows yell about this experimenting with low recording! At times MGM has put out A and B prints in experimenting. My RCA equipment is large enough for twice the seating capacity, and is serviced monthly and with all this the dialogue of most MGM pictures takes all that I have while their noise such as shouting, shooting, etc., is deafening. This does not build up patronage. Played May 28.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa.

VOICE OF BUGLE ANN, THE: Lionel Barrymore, Maureen O'Sullivan—Very good program picture that did a fair midweek business. Played May 26.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy—A highly overrated and oversold picture. A million dollars worth of star names and an exceedingly poor story. However, the stars brought them in so we did a fair business on this one. Played May 24.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

WIFE VS. SECRETARY: Clark Gable, Jean Harlow, Myrna Loy—With this cast a big box-office picture should have been made but it wasn't made. I doubt whether it has as much entertainment value as the average program picture. Running time, 90 minutes. Played June 12-13.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

Monogram

TEXAS TERROR: John Wayne—Good western. Wayne does not draw like he used to.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Paramount

ANYTHING GOES: Bing Crosby, Ethel Merman—A fine picture. Good singing and comedy. Drew 40 per cent over average Wednesday-Thursday business. Played June 3-4.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

BRIDE COMES HOME, THE: Claudette Colbert, Fred MacMurray—Rather weak story for Colbert. However, did 25 per cent over average business. Played May 16-17.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

FOUR HOURS TO KILL: Richard Barthelmess, Helen Mack—Very good picture of its kind. Can't see why some producer doesn't sign Barthelmess for some more pictures. We would like to see more of him.—Sammie Jackson, Jacskon Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

GIVE US THIS NIGHT: Gladys Swarthout, Jan Kiepura—This is a perfect production and these two opera singers do a wonderful job as well as everyone connected with this excellent picture. It is as poor at the box office as it is a good picture. I will not sign up for any opera stars this coming season.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

KLONDIKE ANNIE: Mae West, Victor McLaglen—A washout for us financially and otherwise. Folks only yawned. Paramount should forget Mae for awhile or else give her something worth doing, since we hear they have her back under their wing. Played June 3-4.—L. A. Irwin, Palace Theatre, Penacook, N. H. General patronage.

MAN ON THE FLYING TRAPEZE, THE: W. C. Fields, Mary Brian—I picked this old one up as a sub for a current release. A bad mistake on my part as this is by far the poorest thing Fields ever played in. Had many complaints and am afraid it will hurt W. C.'s drawing in the future. Although it drew above midweek average, I am very sorry I didn't let this one lay.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

MILKY WAY, THE: Harold Lloyd—Was very much disappointed in this. Drew the smallest Saturday-Sunday business since the big blizzard. Played May 23-24.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

NOW AND FOREVER: Gary Cooper, Shirley Temple, Carole Lombard—Played this return engagement. Business only fair. Picture is still good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TIMOTHY'S QUEST: Eleanore Whitney, Dickie Moore—Positively made to order for the small town house. We made the mistake of playing on Bargain Nights. Is plenty good for preferred playing time. One of the few pictures that come along in the course of a season that no one will kick about. I used this, "Prisoner of Shark Island" and "Magnificent Obsession" all in the same week. Easily the finest trio of pictures I ever gave my patrons in a single week.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND: Gail Patrick, Dean Jagger—A widely read Zane Grey story that pleased and drew slightly above the average. Running time, 66 minutes. Played May 22-23.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

Republic

LEATHERNECKS HAVE LANDED, THE: Lew Ayres, Isabel Jewell—This one makes good entertainment and turns in a good account at the box office. Ranks better than average picture.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

RKO Radio

ARIZONIAN, THE: Richard Dix, Margot Grahame—Best western in a long time. Dix very popular here in westerns.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

CHATTERBOX: Anne Shirley, Phillips Holmes—Fair progam picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

FOLLOW THE FLEET: Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers—This pair are the tops in screen teams and my patrons like them even when we cannot show this picture to them until this late date. Business better than average.—W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

RAINMAKERS, THE: Wheeler and Woolsey—Bought RKO just recently so this was more than six months old when I used it. Business was exceptionally good and I made a nice net, as the picture was in the lowest price classification. These boys have always gone to bat for me and are drawing better now than ever before. The closing scene where the rain turns to snow is bad, but after first run I cut out the snow and ended with the rain.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

SILLY BILLIES: Wheeler and Woolsey—Lost plenty on this picture. Too much opposition. Plays at three schools in nearby towns and local school. The picture is fine fare for those who like Wheeler and Woolsey. Wish RKO has left the name "Wild West" stick instead of "Silly Billies." This picture would be fine for Saturday night.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TO BEAT THE BAND: Helen Broderick, Hugh Herbert—Although we ran this with "Drift Fence" as a double feature, failed to draw above average business. Played May 20-21.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

TOP HAT: Fred Astaire, Gingers Rogers—Played old and did not do satisfactory business. This grand combination has not hit for me on any of their productions. Can't quite figure it out. I am playing "Follow the Fleet" this week and trust it does a lot more than "Top Hat." In listing my 100 highest grosses for a period of five years, "Top Hat" took 95th place.—L. V. Bergtold, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

TWO IN REVOLT: Louise Latimer, John Arledge—A very good animal story. Used this on a double feature. I was surprised at the number of people it pleased. It was the most popular of the two features. Played June 6-7.—P. E. Braun, Cairo, Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

TWO IN THE DARK: Walter Abel, Margot Grahame—Fine program picture.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WE'RE ONLY HUMAN: Preston Foster, Jane Wyatt—An average program picture. Running time, 70 minutes. Played June 5-6.—G. A. Van Fradenburg, Valley Theatre, Manassa, Col. Farming community patronage.

Twentieth Century-Fox

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee—What would we do without Shirley? Nuf sed! Played June 10-11.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

CAPTAIN JANUARY: Shirley Temple, Guy Kibbee, Slim Summerville—Due to the excellent comedy of Kibbee and Summerville would say that there was more real entertainment in "Captain January" than in Temple pictures for some time. Played to good business for three days. Running time, 75 minutes. Played June 7-9.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre. Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

COUNTRY DOCTOR, THE: Dionne Quintuplets, Jean Hersholt—Biggest box office gross in ten years, in fact, it broke the house record. Nuff sed. Played May 15.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

Quintuplets—This one rang the bell, for after all, Quintuplets—This one rang the bill, for after all, people are far more interested in a human interest story than in much of the sophisticated froth that goes on the screen today. Running time, 94 minutes. Played May 31-June2.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

DANTE'S INFERNO: Claire Trevor. Spencer Tracy—While this picture seemed to satisfy those who saw it, it was a bust at the box office; poorest business of the year. Running time, 88 minutes. Played June 5-6.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

EVERYBODY'S OLD MAN: Irving S. Cobb, Rochelle Hudson—Was agreeably surprised in this picture and especially in Cobb's characterization. While this is a programmer and we played it on a week-end it is good enough for most Sunday spots. Business above average, for which we are giving Cobb the credit. Running time. 84 minutes. Played June 5-6.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

GENTLE JULIA: Jane Withers—A nice little program picture played on double bill to small audience due to a free dance given by a local politician, that is really tough competition. Played June 6-7.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

HERE COMES TROUBLE: Paul Kelly, Arline Judge—A nice program picture with a lot of comedy. Arline Judge is a good bet and easy on the eyes. All she needs is a chance at a real production and she will be one of the most popular stars. Played May 21.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

IN OLD KENTUCKY: Will Rogers, Dorothy Wilson—I used this at Easter time as it seemed that was the appropriate period to use Rogers' last play. The roads were extremely bad; the worst in years, and I did not look for the usual Rogers turnout. I am extremely happy to report that in spite of adverse conditions the people around here attended in large numbers to pay tribute to Rogers in his final story. The attendance was the greatest that ever witnessed any picture in this town and that dates back to 1909. What a tribute to Rogers; the all time house record in his last stand!—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Rait, Rosalind Russell—This is good entertainment, but nothing so out of the ordinary as to justify the price asked. We have run plenty of programmers just as good. Played to only average business. Running time, 79 minutes. Played May 29-30.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

IT HAD TO HAPPEN: George Raft, Rosalind Russell—Personally, I didn't see anything about this one to get excited over but the horse race, but it seemed to please. Raft and Rosalind Russell are very good. Running time, 79 minutes. Played June 6-7.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—It is hardly necessary to report on "Temples" as all exhibitors seem to have the same marvelous experience with them. This one is certainly no exception as it gave me my third highest gross in five years. Am pleased to be signed up for another year with this little mortgage lifter.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

LITTLEST REBEL, THE: Shirley Temple, John Boles—Compares favorably with her earlier releases and a fine box office tonic. Bill Robinson and Shirley do some classy dancing and Shirley sings. A story of the Civil War. Running time, 73 minutes. Played May 29-30.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, John Boles, Barbara Stanwyck—An excellent production and Beery was never better cast. Business not up to expectations, but the picture pleased those who saw it. Played June 7-9.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

MESSAGE TO GARCIA, A: Wallace Beery, Barbara Stanwyck, John Boles—If Wally Beery had not been in this picture, there wouldn't have been any. If ever a man steals the show he does in this one. It's calibre is just an ordinary program picture. We found no enthusiasm over it with the single exception of Beery's work. That was great and all credit must go to him for saving a mediocre picture.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—As usual. George O'Brien turns out a fine performance. Pleasant, clear recording and everybody pleased. Too bad Fox is short-sighted enough to lose this best of western actors. Well, George, we'll be seein' ya wherever you go. Played May 29.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

O'MALLEY OF THE MOUNTED: George O'Brien—About the usual mounted police story. However, they go over good here and George O'Brien is well liked. so it did a nice business. Played May 20.—B. Hollenbeck, Rose Theatre, Sumas, Wash. Small town patronage.

PRISONER OF SHARK ISLAND, THE: Warner Baxter, Gloria Stuart—Exceptionally fine production on important historical event. Should rate as one of the 10 best of 1936. Because of several brutal scenes necessary in this sort of story, it may not prove popular with the timid souls. Business not exceptional, but above average.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

PROFESSIONAL SOLDIER: Victor McLaglen, Freddie Bartholomew—Very good action picture to about average business.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

SHOW THEM NO MERCY: Rochelle Hudson—Nice program picture to about average business or slightly over. Played May 27-28.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

THANKS A MILLION: Dick Powell. Ann Dvorak—The best musical since "42d Street" and a fine draw. Not as much on the chorus and music as most musicals. which was in its favor. Comments were exceptionally fine. Just added proof that Twentieth Century-Fox has box office hits besides the Temples. Fits in perfectly during this "election" year.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

WAY DOWN EAST: Rochelle Hudson, Henry Fonda—The only "A" Fox picture I have played that didn't draw up to expectations. Nothing wrong with the show, however, as it is fine entertainment and will prove popular in any small situation. All comments were very favorable. Pretty old now but well worth a date if you haven't used it.—L. V. Bergtold. Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

WHISPERING SMITH SPEAKS: George O'Brien, Irene Ware—This was double billed with "Transatlantic Tunnel" and drew more comments. A real fine light comedy, railroad outdoor picture. O'Brien O. K. with us.—Harland Rankin, Plaza Theatre, Tilbury, Ontario, Canada. General patronage.

United Artists

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—I paid top money for this, but did not regret it as it drew O. K. and is just about the perfect Friday-Saturday show for any spot. Some reports did not give this much, but they are all wet as it is many, many laps ahead of the average run of action pictures. Compares favorably with "The Call of the Wild." A man's picture that the majority of the women will also enjoy.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

BARBARY COAST: Miriam Hopkins, Edward G. Robinson, Joel McCrea—Fine cast and swell production. Average business. Played June 12.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

DARK ANGEL, THE: Merle Oberon, Fredric March, Herbert Marshall—A fine class production that will naturally play on your Sunday change. The "rough-necks" may not care for it, but the better class of patrons will praise you for running it.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

GHOST GOES WEST, THE: Robert Donat, Jean Parker—Good picture, but I did not gross enough to pay for feature.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

LET 'EM HAVE IT: Richard Arlen, Virginia Bruce—I used this as a sub for "The Melody Lingers On," and although it did a nice business it was the poorest picture I have had from United Artists. Not as good as the current "G Men" pictures. I played "Show Them No Mercy" about a month earlier and this one suffered by comparison. I would say, far below the usual class of productions coming from the United Artists.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Small town and rural patronage.

MELODY LINGERS ON, THE: Josephine Hutchinson, George Houston—Fair picture. No special. Houston not liked here. Hutchinson very popular.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MELODY LINGERS ON, THE: Josephine Hutchinson, George Houston—A drama that pulls at the heartstrings. While there is an absence of Boy and Girl romance, the mother love angle makes up for it. Josephine Hutchinson was ideally suited for the part, the rest of the cast each fitted their parts to perfection. Drawing power a good fair average.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theatre, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

MODERN TIMES: Charles Chaplin, Paulette Goddard—The keynote to this production is written therein; actions speaks louder than words! A grand breakup of the monotonous dialogue and still more dialogue (mostly at the expense of action) that we get pushed down our throats as the daily film fare. Business average and comments divided, but just the same it is something different for which we are duly grateful. One of these annually should be welcomed by the trade even if it does only answer the call for something different and gives a breathing spell from that monotonous blab blab. Ye gods and little fishes, it's a wonder the public is not fed up long ago!—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small small town patronage.

SPLENDOR: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea—Good. Joel McCrea and Miriam Hopkins are very good in this one and Helen Westley gives an excellent performance. Interesting story but title is not so good. Running time, 77 minutes. Played May 27-28.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor, Ethel Merman—Drew beyond expectations, although some thought it overdone on a number of the comedy situations. This gave me eighth highest gross in five years. First Cantor we have played, too.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

STRIKE ME PINK: Eddie Cantor, Ethel Merman—Plenty good, at least that is what the patrons said. Think everyone liked this, but me and my opinion does not count. Cantor is the whole show, but think I can say this one pleased 100%. Running time, 100 minutes. Played May 29-31.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Universal

DON'T GET PERSONAL: James Dunn, Sally Eilers—A lot of horseing around that tire folks out before it is half over. Business poor during the run. —W. H. Brenner, Cozy Theatre, Winchester, Ind. General patronage.

HIS NIGHT OUT: Edward Everett Horton, Irene Hervey—Fine comedy. Played on Monday night and it went over perfect.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

LOVE BEFORE BREAKFAST: Carole Lombard, Preston Foster—Several good cash patrons paused at the box office to inquire where we got this picture. However, in all fairness, there is a high-light to the picture and that is its excellent recording of sound. If you want to hear good recording, this picture has it. Business far below average. Played May 23-25.—A. H. Edwards, Orpheum Theatre, Orwigsburg, Pa. Small town patronage.

MAGNIFICENT OBSESSION: Irene Dunne, Robert Taylor—Universal's finest picture in years. Many said the best picture they had ever seen. The best performance Dunne ever gave.—L. V. Bergtold, Opera House, Kasson, Minn. Rural and small town patronage.

STONE OF SILVER CREEK: Buck Jones, Noel Francis—Not so good. Business off every time we show Jones.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Warner Bros.

MISS PACIFIC FLEET: Joan Blondell, Glenda Farrell—An extra fine program picture. Better than some company's specials. Thank you, Warner, you have been delivering some wonderful pictures this year. —Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

MOONLIGHT ON THE PRAIRIE: Dick Foran, Sheila Mannors—Good western. Business off. This is not as good a picture as I had expected, although it is O. K.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

TREACHERY RIDES THE RANGE: Dick Foran, Paula Stone—Better than the average. It has a couple of good chorus numbers and the action that goes with a western. A little care was taken on the scenario in this one.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind. General patronage.

Miscellaneous

WILDCAT SAUNDERS: Jack Perrin—A fine western. Business off on this, but Perin is not known here. The picture is extra good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Short Features

Celebrity

SIMPLE SIMON: Comicolor Cartoons—A good colored cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Columbia

PARDON MY SCOTCH: 3 Stooges—Average comedy. Running time, 18 minutes.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Educational

DAME SHY: Tuxedo Comedies—Good for plenty of laughs. Running time, two reels.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

HE'S A PRINCE: Tom Howard, George Shelton—If your people like the stars, this is real comedy. If you like them on the radio, you will like them on the screen.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

KISS THE BRIDE: Tuxedo Comedies—Good for plenty of laughs. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

ALIBI RACKET: Crime Doesn't Pay Series—This is a very interesting two reeler of the "Crime Doesn't Pay" series. Running time, 2 reels.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

AUDIOSCOPIKS: Special—The crowd got a thrill out of this, but do not make the mistake we did in ordering short on the glasses. There is not much salvage. Once soiled they are useless for the next customer and the entire effect is lost. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

TWO HEARTS IN WAX TIME: Musical Revue—Color musical. Pretty good. Running time, 2 reels.—C. E. Fismer, Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. Family patronage.

Paramount

CAVALCADE OF MUSIC, THE: Headliners—A Paramount Headliner that is better than the average one reeler. Running time, 1 reel.—C. A. Jordan, Opera House, Cogswell, N. D. Small town patronage.

VIM, VIGOR AND VITALIKY: Popeye the Sailor—A good Popeye cartoon. Popeye is sure fire here.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

YANKEE DOODLE RHAPSODY: Headliners—Booked this one for Memorial Day. Has several appropriate songs for that occasion. An excellent subject and don't let any tell otherwise. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

RKO Radio

LITTLE NEW NEW YORK: Easy Aces—Generally this series does not go over so well, but this one is extra good.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

LOVE ON A LADDER: Edgar Kennedy—A below par comedy.—P. E. Braun, Cairo Theatre, Cairo, Neb. Village and rural patronage.

WINGED PAGEANTRY: Struggle to Live Series—Another excellent nature reel. Pleases and educates. Those reels help the movies with the public.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

United Artists

ELMER THE ELEPHANT: Silly Symphonies—Another excellent Silly from Disney. Running time, one reel.—Roy C. Irvine, Ritz Theatre, Ritzville, Wash. General patronage.

SILLY SYMPHONIES and MICKEY MOUSE (Second Run): These go over very well second run in a town of 2,000.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

Universal

CARNIVAL TIME: Jean Sargent, Jack Fulton—Pretty fair two reeler.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

FUN HOUSE, THE: Oswald Cartoons—A good black and white cartoon.—C. L. Niles, Niles Theatre, Anamosa, Iowa. General patronage.

HARLEM BOUND: Mentone Musical Comedy No. 4—This was the worst two reeler that I have ever played from Universal. More complaints on this than any feature I have ever run. Perhaps it was a little too "dark."—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

Vitaphone

OFF THE RECORD: Melody Masters—Another pleasing Melody Master. This series is always good. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

PLAYGROUNDS: Our Own United States—Very interesting number but recording is spotty. Running time, 10 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

VITAPHONE HEADLINERS: Nick Lucas, Four Mullen Sisters—Fine one reeler.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

WASH YOUR STEP: Hal LeRoy—The tops in snappy entertainment. The O'Brien portraits are the high light of this number. Hal LeRoy does his usual high class dancing and there is variety enough to please everyone. Running time, 21 minutes.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Serials

Mascot

BURN 'EM UP BARNES: Jack Mulhall, Frankie Darro, Lola Lane—One of the best, if not the best, serials that I have ever played. Extra good print on this.—Sammie Jackson, Jackson Theatre, Flomaton, Ala. General patronage.

FIGHTING MARINES, THE: Grant Withers, George Lewis—Just finished the last chapter and it sure pleased the kiddies. Rather better than most serials.—Gladys E. McArdle, Owl Theatre, Lebanon, Kansas. Small town patronage.

Universal

FLASH GORDON: Buster Crabbe. Jean Rogers—Something different in serials, produced on a lavish scale. I am on the fourth chapter and I believe this has drawing power, especially among the children. I show serials with my Sunday and Monday program, have done so for years, and the last four Sunday's business has held up good, considering the season, the weather being moderate has helped. At the end of each chapter the hero is as usual in a tight spot, and the next chapter he is saved in a logical manner, that is logical for this type of a serial. This is a welcome change in serials. It is all impossible adventures, but Flash Gordon is popular in the comic strips, why not in serials. So far, I consider "Flash Gordon" a good investment.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle Theare, Detroit, Mich. Neighborhood patronage.

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 29.—(A) What common constituent of oil or grease must be avoided in ball bearing lubrication? (B) What must be done in selecting grease for ball bearings? (C) Describe three methods of coupling the sound pickup to the system amplifier. (D) Why does water encounter resistance in flowing through a pipe?

Answers to Question No. 22

Bluebook School Question No. 22 was: (A) Describe an electric condenser and explain its action in an a.c. circuit. (B) What care do projector motors require? (C) Why may good soldering for a power circuit be poor soldering in a sound circuit?

The following made acceptable answers: C. Rau and S. Evans; D. Danielson; G. E. Doe; W. C. Brown; B. DeVietti; W. Limmroth; A. L. Cooper; F. Simms and O. L. Daris; J. R. Prater; R. A. Hooker; E. H. Toedte; H. and T. Edwards; W. H. Edmonds; C. Jones, F. Gumbel and L. Strieck; C. Champney; H. B. Columbare; H. B. Smith; C. L. Loft; C. Lonie; P. and L. Felt; Nic Granby; G. Johnson and L. R. Spooner; W. Burns and T. R. Fanning; C. Hawkens; H. K. Abernathy and R. Tomkins; D. Pollock; H. D. Lally; D. Emmerson; L. A. Keller; T. T. Harper; M. Liptiz; R. and K. Wells; L. Nathan, S. D. Singer, E. N. Quinn and H. T. Bell; B. L. Shaw; L. T. Hunt; F. L. and L. Savlor; S. Myers and O. L. Harris; A. Garlock and J. B. Roth; C. J. McCabe and R. Holmes; H. V. Nathan and J. McGuire; R. L. Norton; R. Morris; F. C. and H. Winkle; M. Wentworth; J. W. Holmes; J. Lansing and R. D. Oberleigh; J. Jacobs; M. L. Lawrence and J. W. Ruther; J. Farraro; H. Martin; W. D. Samuels; J. W. Larcher and L. H. Morgan; L. B. Hardy; P. Redman and N. G. Kilgen; R. Hubbell; G. D. Jones; S. E. and C. Gay; H. T. Todd and L. A. Dodson; F. K. Monroe; N. R. Tomlinson; G. W. Scott; M. and J. Devoy; O. E. Parker and L. L. Lewis; T. N. Powell and N. T. Brown; F. S. King; R. J. Mayhew; F. L. Rice; J. S. Knight and F. T. Hamilton; W. D. Roberts; D. D. Orr; T. H. Morton, L. and F. H. Klarr; H. H. Langtry; R. Mills and J. R. Perkins.

(A) There were many answers to this one that I could not wholly approve or condemn. I therefore decided to have it answered by the Erpi engineering department, which very generously consented to do so. Here is their statement:

"An electric condenser is an arrangement of conductors and insulators which serve to store electro-static energy. The action is somewhat similar to the storage of gas in a tank; the higher the pressure (voltage), the greater the amount of gas (charge) which will be forced into the tank (condenser). If the applied pressure (voltage) is released and an opening (short circuit) is made in the tank, the pressure is relieved (the condenser is discharged). This action may take place quickly if the opening is large enough (short circuit resistance low enough), or if the opening is small (short circuit resistance high), the pressure will be relieved slowly (the condenser will be discharged slowly).

"When a voltage is applied to a condenser a small current flow takes place, the current being known as the 'displacement current.' This current flow then ceases unless the applied voltage is changed. If the voltage reverses itself periodically, as in an alternating current, there is a flow of alternating current in and out of the plates of the condenser, so that a current may be said to flow through the condenser. This ability of the condenser to pass alternating current, but to stop direct current is invaluable in radio work where this principle is used to isolate radio currents from direct currents."

(B) H. K. Abernathy and R. Tomkins say, "Because of special service requirements projector motors require careful, detailed attention. They must be in perfect alignment and properly mounted, to the end that vibration and belt slippage or binding be reduced to a minimum. Lubrication recommendations of the manufacturer should be carried out exactly. Commutators, slip-rings, centrifugal switches and all moving parts should be kept scrupulously clean. All deposits of dirt, carbon or copper dust or just plain dust must be kept from all parts, but especially from between commutator bars. Examine bearings as to their condition once each week in all-day theatres where the service is heavy, and once a month where the service is light. Examine brushes at intervals, to be sure they are making proper contact with the commutator, with neither too little nor too much pressure, and that they fit their holder properly and that all their parts are clean."

E. H. Toedte says, "Projector motors must run with steady speed and with the least possible vibration. Their starting torque should be such as will pick up the speed in time for a smooth changeover, but not sufficiently abrupt to cause unnecessary strain either on the projector mechanical parts or the film. The motor should be kept scrupulously clean in all its parts, and manufacturers recommendations followed as to lubrication, including the kind (grade) of oil and frequency of lubrication."

Which is excellent as far as it goes, Brother Toedte, but had you studied the matter a bit more you would doubtless have spoken of brush contact and pressure. Not a criticism, but a caution to you and other Bluebook School "students" that each proposition presented in a question deserves intensive study, which must be given if you are to get the most out of it.

(C) Rau and Evans say, "What might be considered as good soldering in a power circuit might, with cause, be deemed poor soldering in a sound circuit. This is for the reason that soldering that will serve in a power circuit where large voltages and high currents are used, may not suffice in sound circuits where very small voltages and currents are employed, as is often the case. Such voltages and currents must encounter the least possible amount of resistance if they are to accomplish their purpose. It then follows that if there be any looseness or corrosion at a soldered splice, noise will probably be introduced in the sound, or it may weaken the sound even to the point where it will be non-existent. The electrical connections in sound circuits must therefore be well warmed at the start of soldering, and well cleaned. A non-corrosive soldering flux (resin, for example), must be used. The tightness of the soldered joints should be well tested after completion. Moreover, unless one be well experienced in soldering, one cannot be sure of the test if the wires be twisted together before soldering, this for the reason that whereas the wires may seem to be held securely, still the solder may not be solidly attached to each part. This possible fault must therefore be carefully guarded against."

THEATRE RECEIPTS

The total of theatre receipts for the calendar week ended June 20, 1936, from 97 theatres in 17 major cities of the country was $922,500, a decrease of $24,250 from the total for the preceding week ended June 13, 1936, when 103 theatres in 18 large cities aggregated $946,750.

THE WEEK IN CHICAGO

Morris Leonard, successor to Jack Miller as head of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, will move into new offices in the Standard Oil building July 1, it was learned. Mr. Leonard will have as his assistant in the association's office Miss Myrtle Collins, who served in the same capacity with Mr. Miller.

As the new offices adjoin those now occupied by Mr. Miller it is understood that Mr. Miller's connection with the organization will not be entirely severed. Although out of town on other business a great deal of the time, it is probable that Miller will be available for situations concerning the association that demand his help.

More than 10,000 tickets to "White Angel," which opened at the Chicago theatre Friday, have been sold by the First District of the Illinois State Nurses Association. This group gets a percentage on all tickets they sell. They guaranteed the theatre a sale of 5,000 tickets prior to the sales campaign, which is arousing a great deal of added interest in the film. Groups of nurses are organized in the drive.

George Weinberg, for four years city salesman for Warners here, has been made assistant to Tom Gilliam, newly appointed branch manager. Leo Blank announced the appointment this week. Blank was recently made district manager of the Warner exchanges in this territory.

Allan Usher, branch manager for Paramount, left this week for Hollywood for a short vacation trip. While on the coast Usher will visit the Paramount studios and confer with production executives.

The National Conference on Visual Education was held this week by the DeVry Foundation at the Francis W. Parker school. More than 300 attended the sessions, which featured talks on visual education and film exhibitions. Speakers from all over the United States were present at the sessions, which lasted from Monday until Thursday.

Labor restrictions regarding motion picture studio employees is hurting British film production seriously, according to John W. Considine, Jr., MGM producer, who stopped over in Chicago this week en route to the coast after a four weeks' stay in England.

Considine says that British studios, especially the New London Films studios of Alexander Korda, are as modern or more so than American film studios. The British have used the best ideas from American film plants and profited by them. Where they lack strength, the producer stated, is in manpower. Not that the executives in charge are not skilled in picture making, but the men who carry out their orders have not had the experience Americans have had. Labor regulations for this type of help have made it impossible for the British to hire men from this country to come over and work in the English studios.

The producer left for Hollywood via the Santa Fe Chief to start work on the Eleanor Powell production, "Hats in the Air," which, incidentally, has a London setting. While abroad he took options on several stories.

Alex Yokel, who produced the stage play, "Three Men on a Horse," stopped over in Chicago last week for a few hours before leaving on the Chief for Hollywood. Yokel plans to get talent in Hollywood for a play he will produce in New York this fall.

Plans for New Circuit Denied by Leserman

Reports that financial interests backing Grand National are interested in building a national circuit with seven New York and New England houses operated by Edward Peskay as a nucleus, have been vehemently denied by Mr. Peskay and by Carl Leserman, general sales manager for the company.

Proposed Fire Codes Worry Theatre Owners

Exhibitors in two cities face the prospect of more stringent regulations under fire prevention laws. In San Francisco, a proposed code which would allow theatre patrons waiting for seats to stand in lobbies and foyers providing a ten-foot aisle is maintained, has been rejected by the city fire department as not sufficiently restrictive. The present ordinance, not enforced until recently, requires those waiting for seats to stand in the street.

The Boston House of Representatives has shelved a bill calling for a new building code with drastic provisions for fire-resistant materials in theatre construction.

Peskay To Take Over Two Stamford Houses

Edward Peskay, who has announced his forthcoming resignation from Skouras Theatres, will take over the Strand and Palace at Stamford from Mrs. Mary Vuno on July 1. William Vuno will continue as manager. It is not known whether Mr. Peskay will continue to operate these two houses and his other theatre interests after his resignation takes effect. Last year he acquired the Pickwick, Greenwich, Conn., and he has been operating this house, together with the Capitol, Peekskill, N. Y., and theatres in Cornwall, N. Y.

Engineers Join Staff of Equipment Company

Robert R. French and Rudolph Miehling have been appointed to the engineering staff of Theatre Equipment and Sound Company, New York. Mr. French has resigned his position with Service-on-Sound Corporation and will have full charge of the engineering staff. Mr. Miehling is the author of "Sound Projection" and other books, a member of the Projection Theatre Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers and has been associated with Paramount Publix, Western Electric and others.

Federal ASCAP Suit Is Delayed

Little possibility is seen by Department of Justice officials at Washington for further action in the ASCAP suit before fall.

The recent death of Nathan Burkan, attorney for ASCAP, it was said, threw the case into confusion.

At the present time, another effort is being made to arrive at a stipulation of facts so as to shorten the trial, but as in the past this appears to be moving slowly.

Officials of the Department exhibited little optimism as to the chances of obtaining further action in the case in the near future, and gave the impression that they did not believe anything would transpire before fall unless sudden success attends the efforts to get a stipulation.

Sunday Show Problem Aired in Test Cases

Managers of two theatres in Petersburg, Va., have been arrested on charges of operating their houses on Sunday in violation of State laws and a similar test case in Missouri has been concluded successfully for exhibitors.

The circuit court at Brookfield, Mo., has granted a permanent injunction restraining the City Council of Brookfield from interfering with Sunday shows there. The City Council of Marceline, Mo., also will abide by the decision. Steve Souttar, manager of the Fox DeGraw in Brookfield, was arrested this spring under the Sunday law. The De Graw obtained a temporary injunction which was confirmed by the recent decision.

S. M. Northing and H. Reuben, managers of the two Virginia theatres, have started a test case along similar lines because of many requests for Sunday shows. They were booked by police this week.

Mundus Closes Sales In American Market

Mundus Pictures, a United Artists subsidiary organized to distribute British-made pictures in this country, will not function next year. The company's distribution deal with British and Dominions under which it was to distribute seven of that company's pictures in America, has expired, it was pointed out by United Artists officials as the reason for the dissolution of Mundus.

Facilities Increased

March of Time, using Western Electric's newsreel sound system for its field work, now has a total of four such channels obtained through 20th Century-Fox Film Corporation.

Theatres Pooled

Joint operation as well as combined buying and booking is now in effect for the Paramount, State and Stratton in Middletown, N. Y., under a contract signed by Si Fabian and Paramount.

Warner in Hollywood

Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers Pictures, left this week for Hollywood, where he is expected to pass the summer.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

An international association of showmen meeting weekly in MOTION PICTURE HERALD for mutual aid and progress

CHRISTINE KNOWS HER BALLY

Many pages of recent issues of this journal have been occupied with announcements as have to do with the new season product, and right mouth-watering they are, too. Top stars in good stories thickly studded with boxoffice angles are sufficient reason for optimism—an optimism, however, not shared always in that quarter occupied by the manager.

The reason for this regrettable lack of enthusiasm is not hard to find, for in too many spots the theatreman is forced to regard the new season announcements with the same despair that overcomes a miner who sees before him a mountain of pay-dirt but has no equipment to dig it out.

In other words, folks, the coming product will not get the break it deserves at the boxoffice unless managers rarin' to go and who know how to go are allowed sufficient latitude to bring in the extra grosses that can be had.

A young resident in nearby suburban Westchester County lost her pet, an English setter, and under the head "Christine, 14, Finds Her Dog; Ballyhoo Wins", the New York Herald-Tribune recounts the showmanship employed by the broken-hearted school girl to recover her pooch.

Advertising in the local weekly brought many calls but no dog. So, after lots of thought, the determined girl, deciding on a larger-scale campaign, dipped into her lunch money, designed a poster for general distribution with picture of the dog and reward copy below. Posters were mailed to every police station in the county, three went to each nearby newspaper and all schools covered. Christine then set out on foot, tacked a poster to every available post and fence in town—and, sure 'nuff, a few days later the purp was found and returned.

The beating on the drum, the sock showmanship, the spirited exploitation and advertising dividend-payers are still ignored by exhibitors too occupied with other matters to properly evaluate the necessity of high-power plugging.

They might talk it over with Christine.

Out in Topeka, Kansas, says Manager Carl Kruger, of the Grand Theatre, high school students were given actual scholastic credits for attendance at the showing of "Little Lord Fauntleroy". Well, if they're going to expand the idea to other attractions, it won't be long before a lot of picture-minded pupils will wind up their high school careers by graduating with the highest of honors.

AFTER EIGHT YEARS

During the past weeks, three long-time and able Round Tablers informed this desk of the termination of their jobs. Coincidently, each of the boys had put in eight years in the same situation.

What happened?

One reports being turned loose for economic reasons, the second was given no satisfactory account, he says, for his ousting and the third turned in his time because of too much relation trouble. Thus, three sound showmen who have evidently proven their worth over long stretches are forced to let go for reasons hard to fathom.

If a man does not do a good job it should certainly take a whole lot less than eight years to uncover his weaknesses and in justice to tell him where he failed. And it should not take the same period of time to discover that a man who has delivered consistently has suddenly become a luxury on the payroll or that he is undesirable because some in-law does not like the shape of his ears.

Allowing for outside conditions that may affect any layout, the fact remains that dropping good men for personal or less than the most imperative of business reasons will not only hurt grosses but hasten the day when the manager is afforded the same protection given other and no more important classifications of theatre personnel.

SUMMER THEATRES AND SUCHLIKE

In those localities where the summer theatres are operating, managers may have cause to regard this periodic invasion as still another entertainment to lure business away from picture houses. And in spots where little is done to cope with these summer shows, no doubt there will be reason for weeping.

However, the manager who takes such oppositions in his stride, who keeps himself on his toes, his house in tip-top shape and stays right behind the shows without giving the other fellow much chance to get set, has little to worry over.

And without changing the subject too abruptly, the laddie who answers in the affirmative to the above has also very little to worry over at any time of the year in the face of opposition, seasonal or otherwise, that appears upon the horizon.

Audience Reactions Broadcast from Theatre

Vancouver audiences had a new stunt pulled on them when Maynard Joiner and Larry New, assistant, Capitol Theatre, devised a broadcast and house stunt.

Taking a microphone through the audience, New asked aisle-seat patrons what they thought of "Show Boat." Some asked were plants, and answers were broadcast over p. a. system and radio station.

Joiner reports there was one little slip when a lady asked how she liked the picture, said "I don't know, I haven't seen it yet."

Small Town Girl Picked by Audience

Main stunt in Francis Deering's "Small Town Girl" campaign at Loew's State, Houston, Texas, was a promotion stunt with the Houston Post in which six small town girls, chosen from their photographs, were brought to Houston and entertained by the theatre and newspaper. Cash prize and several gifts from cooperating merchants were presented to the young lady selected by the Saturday night theatre audience.

Special story was carried in papers on the appearance of a silhouette artist in lobby during opening two days. Artist clipped silhouettes of young ladies and pasted them on card along with that of Robert Taylor.

Serialization was planted in paper, spot radio announcement secured and small folders signed by Robert Taylor and reading: "You may be a small town girl but I would like to have a date with you at Loew's," etc., were distributed by Western Union boys at office buildings. Roses for presentation to first 200 ladies attending opening matinee were promoted from florist and calling cards left in a house to house distribution. Homer McCallon, publicist, aided in putting on the campaign.

Guttman Broadcasts On "Lonesome Pine"

Week ahead of opening of "Lonesome Pine," Mike Guttman, Colonial Theatre, Watertown, S. D., planted spot announcements on radio, stressing the all color angle. Opening day Mike conducted a 15-minute personal recommendation broadcast.

Newspapers were generous with stories and art work, bally truck covered city and specially constructed lobby display was planted week ahead with real pines, shrubs, and all the trimmings.

Tablet Is Dedicated To 'Mohicans' Author

The dedication of a tablet to James Fenimore Cooper at the New York high school named after the famed author was arranged by Hal Horne's Blackstone Agency in conjunction with Monroe Greenthal's United Artists' exploitation department as a build-up for "The Last of the Mohicans," soon to be released.

Prominent educators, authors and school children joined in honoring the memory of Cooper at the exercises held in the school auditorium at which the tablet was unveiled. Special committee presented the bronze plaque bearing a portrait of the author and an inscription containing the outstanding features of his career. Dr. John H. Finley made the dedicatory address and was introduced by Dr. Henry Seidel Canby, editor, Saturday Review of Literature, and chairman of the committee. Further ceremonies took the form of a tableau wherein costumed school pupils depicted outstanding characters of the Cooper novels.

Accompanying photo shows Drs. Finley and Canby viewing the plaque with representatives of the Iroquois Indian tribe who participated in the exercises, which were publicised in the metropolitan press and carried by the wire services.

"Mr. Deeds" Goes to Town In Peoria for Fitzgibbon

Highlight of E. G. Fitzgibbon's "Deeds" campaign at the Palace in Peoria, Ill., was tieup with six cooperating merchants. Co-op page was planted in paper with catchline "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town With $30 in Cash for You." Each of the stores was allotted a certain time when Mr. Deeds appeared there and gave away dollar bills.

Stores announced in ads and window cards when the gentleman would appear. Each bill handed out had a slip attached to it reading: "Here is a dollar for you, I just inherited $20,000,000 and this is my idea of going to town. Some people think I'm pixilated for doing this. Do you?"

Local street car company permitted advertising cards on their fenders for a reported first time. Cards reading "Mr. Deeds goes to town on our weekly dollar Pass." Various stores gave picture nice break in their ads with copy tying into picture, and a classified personal campaign was planted in cooperating paper. City manager Worley cooperated on all exploitation.

Music Hall Tests New Hosiery Brand

It seems that those well-timbered showmen at Macy's department store in New York wanted to put over a new brand of women's hosiery and struck upon the smart idea of selling the sturdiness of the stockings through a tieup with Hazel Flynn, Radio City Music Hall publicity director, who utilized the services of the Hall's famed Rockettes in this wise:

The dancers were supplied with hosiery and requested to keep a careful record through a questionnaire as to when the stockings gave out, if at all, how many times they had been washed, etc., over a two-week period. The number of steps from dressing rooms to stage, from stage to dressing rooms, number of steps in the vigorous Can Can dance presented during the weeks of the stunt, were computed accurately by the Rockettes trainers, Gene Snyder and Emelia Sherman.

The store then tabulated these findings and incorporated them in a full page ad that ran in various New York papers, the flash topped with a giant photo of the dancers in the midst of the Can Can dance. In addition, a main window (see photo) was given over to publicising the tiein and also the theatre attraction.

Hazel Flynn reports the success of this co-operation as bringing calls from big stores in other parts of the country requesting similar tieups. Tiein was effective through Paul Hollister, store vice-president, and Bernard Waldman, of Modern Merchandizing Bureau.

Barcroft Plants "Boat" Handicap

A "Show Boat" handicap was planted for that date by John L. Barcroft, publicity director, RKO Palace, Columbus, Ohio, as a feature race with Beulah Park track. A "Show Boat" queen was selected to present the trophy to winner on the judges stand, track was bannered at entrance and on judges stand and the race was broadcast with picture plug.

Columbus Red Birds were tied up whereby lucky score card holders were awarded tickets and stunt plugged over stadium's p.a. system. Another stunt which netted Barcroft some nice radio breaks was tieup with station WAIU featuring a star guessing contest in naming the stars in the picture. This went over the air three times.

"Mutiny" Exhibit Built For Barcelona Showing

Rodrigo Soler and Samuel S. Cornfeld of the Cine Femina in Barcelona, Spain, gave "Rebilion Abordo" (Mutiny on the Bounty) a bangup campaign. Through the cooperation of the MGM publicity forces, an exhibit was erected at the city's most central location, which included a branch boxoffice of the Femina.

Attendants dressed in the striped quasi-convict uniforms of the Bounty guided visitors through the exhibit. Through the cooperation of the Barcelona Naval Museum, material was promoted for the display, among which was a giant ship's model of the "Bounty" period originally made by a Spaniard who had been taken prisoner at the Battle of Trafalgar under Nelson. Beside this stood a model of a modern British liner which today makes the run over the same course from Portsmouth to Tahiti. Above this was suspended a miniature plane depicting a world-service which flies the same route in five days.

A continuous screen extending around entire triangular exhibition featured not only outstanding scenes from the picture in the form of stills, but those of forthcoming attractions at the Femina.

THE "FIRST MENTIONS" FOR MAY

Highlights of Campaigns from Blumenstock, Saunders, Reddin and Allender Voted May "Firsts"

The four theatremen winning the May "Firsts" gathered their honors with campaigns on pictures representing four producers, Warner Bros., Paramount, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Twentieth Century-Fox and in this instance all entries were put over in first-run houses in their various locations. The Governor of Connecticut, the ex-Lord Mayor of Liverpool, England, the Atlantic City Welfare Board and leading citizens of Bethlehem, Pa., were among the folks who cooperated with the managers in putting over their campaigns.

A bangup job was put on for the one day engagement of "Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Atlantic City Stanley Theatre by Warner Brothers' zone publicist, Sid Blumenstock, who secured the local Welfare Bureau to sponsor the engagement. Bureau circularized its mailing list, contacted schools, civic clubs and newspapers.

Through cooperation of Superintendent of Schools, every teacher was circularized, the Superintendent following this up personally with letter and information to teachers that special student's tickets were available. Representatives in each school were appointed to handle the tickets. Cards were placed on all bulletin boards, bookmarks distributed in addition to distributing to music teachers copies of the story on Mendelssohn's music taken from Motion Picture Herald.

Libraries were supplied with special stills prominently displayed with Shakespeare's works. Large department store utilized window display tying in with June bride's sale copy reading "When you march to Mendelssohn," etc., etc. Radio campaign was highlighted by interview on the picture with president of the Business Women's Club.

The outside territory was also well covered with Sid arranging with leading merchants in nearby towns to handle sales of reservations, stores soliciting orders from any customers.

A "ticket selling duel" was inaugurated in the zone, with various Warner managers running contests among employees offering prizes for high sale of tickets. Telephone campaign in which ushers delivered tickets direct to home was another feature that added to the word of mouth advertising.

Ex-Lord Mayor Opens Reddin's "Milky Way" Bar

With assistance of the ex-Lord Mayor of Liverpool, England, Tony Reddin, Paramount Theatre, for "Milky Way" opened a new milk cocktail bar with due ceremonies, Hizzoner having the first drink. Special trailer calling attention to the bar was run, milk bottle caps were imprinted with picture and playdates and stores and dealers carried window displays. Free milk was distributed at schools, Harold Lloyd favors were given at dance hall and a series of teaser ads were inserted between all theatre ads in local newspapers.

As was done on this side, Reddin made every possible tiein with local milk companies, the dairies bannering over 200 delivery trucks with theatre copy.

Governor Cross Tied In To "Ziegfeld" Opening

Local exposition celebrating the State Centennial with Governor Cross of Connecticut in town as honor guest gave Matt Saunders, pinch hitting for vacationing Morris Rosenthal at the Majestic in Bridgeport, an opportunity to utilize the visit of the executive for exploitation on "Ziegfeld."

Saunders gathered a flock of local beauties, dressed them in especial "Ziegfeld" costumes and had them pose with the Governor for newspaper breaks. Also present was Ned Wayburn, long identified with Ziegfeld productions, who spoke from the stage relating some stories of the great producer.

The costumed girls were used in many ways to publicize the date. They attended the exposition, distributing heralds and also posed before the Sears Roebuck booth, the photo published the following day as part of a large store co-op ad. Girls also rode in especially decorated truck, the feature of a street parade which included sound truck and fleet of new model bannered cars all promoted for the occasion. Girls also distributed heralds at night clubs and Matt had one of them pose out front (see photo) as further buildup.

Of further aid were a number of excellent windows topped by a Lillian Russell costume in one of the main windows of the largest local department store. Newspaper advertising included three pages of co-op ads and publicity covering art, special features, etc., distinctly out of the ordinary.

A typical Hollywood opening with all the accessories proved to be a traffic-stopper and Saunders reports the cooperation of leading local society women who helped dress the theatre with fresh flowers, the entire orchestra pit being covered with lilacs. Roses were given to all women at the opening.

Temple Resemblance Contest Tops "January" Store Tiein

With the local department store handling the various Shirley Temple merchandise, manager Paul Allender, Boyd Theatre, Bethlehem, Penna., effected a community-wide campaign to make the entire area Temple-conscious for the date on "Captain January."

Highlight was a resemblance contest started twelve days before the opening with this angle publicized by the store also in a number of towns in the drawing area. For the contest, which drew over 600 entries, numbered blanks were distributed at the store only and with the name and address of each child was also filed the age, height and general description necessary.

The store further built up the tiein with many co-op ads and radio also used extensively and in each department featuring the Temple marchandise were placed price tickets, together with pictures of the starlet. In addition 250 window-size display cards were scattered through the entire store, and important windows also given over to display. Further progress was made through the mailing by the store of postcards to over 1,000 children whose parents had purchased Temple dresses.

Newspaper publicity on the contest was generous, insured by the participating on the judging committee of representatives from the various dailies who acted in conjunction with Allender and other locals.

Seattle Theatre Setup Changes in Past Decade

Puget Sound Metropolis Called Example of Unmolested Chain Operation

by W. A. PRAGER
Seattle Correspondent

Once the center of the Pacific Coast's most competitive theatrical area, with three nationally-known operating groups and a score of independents constantly fighting for control of patronage, today Seattle is a key center of motion picture exhibition where harmony and serenity prevails.

The change has been a gradual process over a period of ten years or more. During this time, however, the Seattle public has never suffered for lack of good entertainment at moderate prices, and today enjoys topnotch operation which is well patronized by a discerning group of showgoers.

The city of Seattle, itself, is a seaport town where millions of dollars annually pass through the Port of Seattle registry. It is the closest American port to the Orient with its great silk trade. Five transcontinental railway lines have their terminus in Seattle. Two transcontinental airlines have division headquarters here.

Industry and manufacturing, likewise, are contributing factors to Seattle's success. A wealth of lumber operation is conducted almost at Seattle's doorway, and the fishing industry of Alaska and the North Pacific ocean bring millions of dollars worth of transactions into this port annually. Nearby are small produce farms that contribute to Seattle's reputation of fine food products at minimum prices. The city truly enjoys a diversified list of activities, interests and industries.

Labor Groups Outnumber White Collars

Seattle's population, 365,000 by the most recent U. S. official census, is boosted approximately another 100,000 by the "trading area" surrounding the city proper. Thus there are close to one-half million people that can be classed as patrons of Seattle's business firms and places of amusement. A majority of these people are Americans, with labor groups probably outnumbering the white collar workers to a decided degree. Lumber operations, shingle mills, etc., enlist a large percentage of Scandinavians, so that the state of Washington and city of Seattle probably can claim second position in this classification of nationality, ranking next to Minnesota.

Oriental races are well represented in Seattle, with both Chinese and Japanese living together in a distinct section of the city with their own business houses and theatres. The city also has a high percentage of Filipino male residents, hundreds of whom spend the four summer months in Alaskan fishing and cannery operations and the balance of the year in Seattle. A distinct Negro district houses several thousand persons.

The various groups of theatremen working in harmony control the situation in Seattle, thus, according to our informant, minimizing the usual competition between operator and operator. However, the principal opposition to the Northwest houses arises strongly in the summertime and from Dame Nature herself. Seattle residents susceptible to the influences of the great outdoors especially in the period of the warm months, find these activities "more important than theatre-going from June to October."

The laborers are employed in such industries as lumber and fishing, mentioned above, and also shipping, flour mill operation, farming, automobile body plants, poultry raising, railroad operation and maintenance, packing plants for the meat industry, a small amount of mining of coal, etc., and other small manufacturing enterprises. The city of Seattle and surrounding area is strongly unionized, principally in affiliation with the American Federation of Labor, and wage scales are as high, if not higher, in proportion to living costs, as in any important center of the nation.

Accordingly, there is no real "slum" element in Seattle and its laboring class is a big factor in the patronage of places of amusement. The theatre industry is strongly affiliated with labor; in fact, operating policies have in some instances been definitely based upon labor conditions, and major stage units do not play in Seattle, for one reason, because of unreasonable demands of musicians and stage employees unions.

The average admission rates among the first run theatres are 25 cents for matinees and 40 cents at night. A two percent state admission tax prevails on all tickets over 10 cents. Neighborhood and suburban theatre admissions average 20 cents. Matinees are given at neighborhood houses on Saturdays and Sundays only, and the average charge is 15 cents. Downtown admission prices are sometimes boosted for special stage attractions such as Cab Calloway's Band, the Parisian Follies, etc., which played here during the past season. Top prices then are 50 cents, plus tax.

QUINTUPLETS
COUNTRY DOCTOR

5 STAR PICTURE. That's how Duncan Campbell, Capitol Theatre, Midland, Ont., advertised "Country Doctor." Above lobby display shows the five cutout misses strutting their stuff.

Seattle is not a good "road show" picture town. Films such as "Midsummer Night's Dream," "The Great Ziegfeld" and others in past seasons have been booked into local theatres for two-a-day runs at $1.50 top but invariably fail to register at the box office. Returned later, at popular prices, they are highly successful.

Seattle's transportation problem is not involved. The city owns and operates the municipal street car system, with fast and efficient service to all residential districts. As adjuncts to the street cars, the city operates motor busses to more remote districts. Street car fares are high—eight and one-third cents—but transfer privileges are liberal and the fares have been maintained at the same level for so many years that the public has become accustomed to the high rate.

Transportation Situation No Problem

Also, Seattle has a great percentage of its population owning and driving private automobiles. Parking restrictions downtown in the evenings are very liberal. In addition, there are scores of garages adjacent to theatres, and many open air parking lots where the rate is only 15 cents. Two of the city's first run theatres furnish free parking to patrons in nearby building garages after 6:00 p.m. The transportation and parking problem does not decrease downtown theatre patronage in the least.

As mentioned at the beginning of this article, Seattle at present is pretty much an example of unmolested chain ownership and operation, both in downtown and suburban theatres. Five of the seven first run houses are Hamrick-Evergreen theatres, and the same circuit controls the two major suburban houses in the University district.

Another of the first runs is owned by Jensen-VonHerberg, who also control three leading suburban houses. The seventh first run house is a John Danz enterprise; the latter operator also having almost exclusive control of the city's second run business in the downtown area with five theatres under his ownership and management.

Under these conditions, individual managers have very little latitude in the matter of policies or operation of their theatres. In reality, they are "house managers" whose principal duties consist of maintaining efficiency of operation and personnel in their house. For the most part they take no part in outside activities, club memberships, etc. In this respect, the managers of suburban and neighborhood houses are perhaps more active than their downtown brothers—they at least take part in district and neighborhood affairs.

MORE ON SEATTLE THEATRES

Executives headquarters of the various circuits represented in the Seattle territory handle all theatre operating details. Film contracts are signed by company heads, bookings for all theatres are handled through the central booking office maintained apart from the theatres, advertising is laid out and scheduled by the advertising departments, often without having been seen by the theatre managers. In fact, local managers in one circuit do not even see their pictures at previews—their first knowledge of the film which they are presenting is gained from trade paper or fan magazine reviews and they see the picture as a member of the audience at the opening matinee!

Managers Remain on Background

Under these conditions, it is only logical that the theatre service is 100 percent perfect, and the condition of the house is as fine as the "main office" budget will permit. Managers have very little to do other than supervise the smooth physical operation and maintenance of the theatre. Very efficient staffs of usherettes handle patrons with the utmost courtesy and politeness. Projection and sound equipment is maintained at a high peak of perfection under the guidance of expert projectionists, especially among the first run houses. Most of the city's theatres are fairly modern and thus have excellent ventilation facilities, comfortable and clean public rooms, etc. Managers of the downtown theatres are all men experienced in theatre operation from all standpoints, and they maintain the city's houses at a high point of efficiency in all respects. They seldom contact the public in an official capacity, however, choosing to remain unobtrusively in the background.

Since the Seattle sector is controlled by three or four operating units, advertising and publicity expense has been reduced to a minimum. Mediums of advertising cannot "play" one theatre against another to increase patronage. Newspapers receive fair size ads for the opening of pictures each Thursday and Friday, but week-day space other than that is kept down to a minimum. Likewise, there is not a great amount of ballyhoo or exploitation used. Advertising managers of the leading circuits are somewhat conservative in their style, and with little or no competition except among their own houses they do not feel the need for extensive promotions of any kind.

Newspaper tieups consist principally of serialized publication of film stories such as "Small Town Girl," etc., and cooperation with classified advertising promotions by giving free theatre tickets to ad contest winners in exchange for publicity in the paper other than on the theatre pages. The Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Hearst morning daily, naturally gives widespread publicity to all theatres showing Cosmopolitan productions. Radio stations are used frequently for spot announcements and broadcasting of electrical transcriptions of various musical pictures from time to time. Merchants are usually responsive to conservative window tieups because they are not continually bothered by the theatre people seeking far-fetched cooperation. Tieups with Shirley Temple dresses, dolls, etc., book departments on pictures such as "Little Lord Fauntleroy," etc., are easily arranged because they are mutually beneficial. Street ballyhoos are seldom used by the leading theatres. Straightforward advertising and publicity, as prepared by the circuits' advertising departments, is generally used. Art work is maintained on a high plane, and considerable expense is involved in the preparation of larger ads, from the standpoint of layout and engraving costs.

Seattle's three daily newspapers are all very friendly in their attitude toward the theatres. The Times, independent evening paper, carries a majority of all theatre space, including regular listings of suburban and neighborhood houses. Richard E. Hays, motion picture editor, is given featured position on his paper's theatre page with by-line reviews of the first run pictures which he usually sees at company previews the week prior to their public showings, then printing his reviews the day the picture opens. His Sunday page features articles on various phases of the film industry and its personnel. The Times does not use syndicated Hollywood columns, but Hays does run a daily column of Hollywood news which he writes, or rewrites, from articles in the trade press.

The Post-Intelligencer, Hearst morning daily, features the columns of Louella Parsons and other Hearst syndicate writers. Everhardt Armstrong, local editor, also personally reviews the first run films that open weekly. The Sunday film section goes in extensively for art work of the leading film players and theatre attractions. Both of these papers are cooperative on tieups of a conservative nature. Mediocre pictures are seldom given a "bad" review, unless readers can read between the lines. None of the local papers use the "star" system of rating pictures, or attempt in any way to classify attractions.

The Star, third paper, is a Scripps publication. Formerly it featured a very newsy and complete theatre page by Harry Mills, local editor, but this was discontinued recently when Mills resigned. This paper receives the least amount of theatre advertising, and consequently publishes only the most brief reviews of films. A syndicated Hollywood column is used about three times weekly. The former Saturday double-page spread of theatre advertising and news features is now reduced to about three columns total.

As far as competition goes, it might be said that the principal competition to theatres occurs in the summertime, and comes from nature itself. Seattle is so closely adjacent to fine summer resorts, week-end vacation spots and neighboring sports centers that many people find outdoor activities more important than theatre-going from June to October. Boating, fishing, swimming, mountain sports, golf and other kindred sports are enjoyed nightly during the summer months.

Night Baseball Only Competition

A three-month horse race season each summer is slightly competitive to matinees at the theatres. Nightly dog racing which cut into theatre business two summers ago has been banned by state legislation. Legitimate shows are practically a forgotten factor, except for a few "repertory theatre" efforts which play to audiences of a few hundred people weekly at the two or three small amateur playhouses in the city. Night baseball for about twelve weeks each summer is the only professional sport that regularly competes with theatres for attendance. Such infrequent professional sports as boxing, wrestling, ice hockey, etc., naturally get their share of patronage, but they are held only once weekly or even less frequently during the summer season.

Each winter the Seattle Symphony orchestra gives a series of subscription and popular concerts, only fairly well patronized by a limited group of art patrons. Road show attractions have been booked only once or twice a season. The city's two stage shows are both operated by John Danz as part of his picture theatre circuit, and these are in conjunction with film programs; one is a vaudeville-film house and the other a burlesque house with third run films. Infrequent concert attractions are well patronized. Radio is not considered a strong competitor to good motion picture programs.

In general, Seattle is considered a fairly good show town—not strong. It is distinctly a "star" town, with few exceptions. Good average pictures, without star names in the cast, usually fail to click as well as less meritorious films that have featured performers' names listed. There are very few pictures that enjoy good patronage for more than two weeks. After that period, attend-

"Milky Way" Bar Used by Armstrong

Before leaving his post at the Carlton Theatre in London for his present assignment as publicity director for RKO, John Armstrong on "Milky Way" opened what is reported to be the first milk bar in a place of entertainment. Entire cost was financed by the Milk Marketing Board and accompanying photo shows John, second from the left, imbibing a bit of cow juice. Stunt broke in dailies and dairy magazines with cut of Chairman of the Milk Board at the bar.

Front of the theatre was embellished by giant neon sign, oversized cutout of Harold Lloyd surrounded by "smiling" cutout cows. Entire staff during engagement was dressed in uniforms promoted from dairy, dozens of sandwichmen paraded streets and several merchants came through with excellent window displays.

Sobler Sponsors "Sutter's Gold" Ball

San Diego's largest and finest ballroom staged a "Sutter's Gold" ball opening night of the picture at Abe Sobler's Spreckles Theatre. Orchestra was dressed up with miner hats with imprinted hat bands and their doorman was dressed in old style with sash pistol, large brimmed hat, etc. Passes were given in dance contests and announcements made over p.a. plugging the picture.

Attractive lobby display was constructed foreground of which was covered with imitation grass, tiny covered wagons, bleached bones and old time props to give atmosphere. One of the ushers in miner costume was stationed beside the display. For street bally, Abe used a covered wagon with picture plug on its canvas top, special matinee was held for school children and cooperating merchant offered passes to those presenting best snapshots to be developed.

Grocers Aid Newton For "Milky Way"

Starting his advertising for "Milky Way" a week ahead of opening, Brewster Newton, Colonial, Belfast, Maine, tied up four of the largest grocery stores to distribute imprinted lucky number bags for which passes were given holders.

Every day at noon boy dressed as a milkman paraded streets carrying sign and decorated milk can. Inside can were numbered cards and stopping folks at random, boy asked them to draw cards. Lucky numbers were posted daily in lobby and tickets given winners.

Brewster promoted local high school for tieup offering tickets to students in domestic science classes turning in best recipes with milk as principal ingredient. Judging committee composed of teachers, students and townsfolk. Opening day uniformed milkmen went through main streets giving away pint bottles of milk appropriately labeled which were promoted from cooperating dairy.

Bray Sends Calf to Major Bowes

Hartnett's Anniversary Floral Lobby

Funny Face Contest Planted by Braunagel

Jack Braunagel, Roxy Theatre, Logan, Utah, topped his "Modern Times" campaign with a newspaper contest on funny faces of Cantor, guest tickets were offered winners. In still another paper serialization was planted with art work.

Entire staff of usherettes were dressed in pink uniforms for the occasion, pink gelatin was put over all lights in foyer and dance halls plugged tunes from picture. For his street bally Jack used man with back banner and head concealed carrying papier mache mask of Cantor, copy reading "I laughed my head off," etc. In his lobby Braunagel placed cage filled with pink balloons which were blown up and down by fan underneath, tickets were awarded those coming closest to guessing correct number of balloons.

Moss Spots Contests On "Lonesome Pine"

Dick Moss, Fox Boulevard, Los Angeles, Cal., for "Trail of the Lonesome Pine" tied up with local druggist for a window display plugging a photography contest with entrants receiving prizes for best examples of outdoor photography. Local market paper ran a coloring contest and restaurants carried menu strips.

For his lobby Dick dressed it in atmospheric attire, special kid matinee was held and all girl scouts were admitted for special prize upon presentation of identification card.

Reeths Offers Cash On "Show Boat" Contest

Fred Reeths, Sheboygan, Sheboygan, Wis., tied up distributors in his territory for "Show Boat." Cards were attached to cans of coffee with instructions to write Maxwell House Coffee as many times as possible, to person writing it the greatest number of times a $10 cash prize was awarded and presented on stage. All grocers used window cards announcing the contest.

Bray Sends Heifer To Major Bowes

When Lew Bray, Vernon Theatre, Vernon, Texas, recently played Major Bowes amateurs, show was plugged two weeks ahead with trailers and lobby displays, plus three sheets and heralds covering a four hundred mile radius.

The main feature of Lew's campaign was when he promoted a 660 lb. pure bred Hereford calf and had the animal shipped to Major Bowes. Bray, pictured in accompanying photo reports the entire stunt cost him $3, cost of veterinarian's inspection.

BULLETS or BALLOTS

Cocks' Gun and Knife Display

"Bullets" Campaigns From the Warner-ites

Soap-box orator was put to work by Sid Dannenberg of Warner's Cleveland zone to create interest in Hippodrome showing of "Bullets or Ballots." This stunt was staged for three days prior to picture's opening. Speaker, after denouncing rackets and racketeers, and seeing he had crowd interested, wound up by citing the picture, which he said he had seen in Chicago, and "which gave a forceful expose of this shameful racketeering conditions." Also, that he had learned, since having come to Cleveland, that the picture would be shown at the Hippodrome Theatre and the name of the picture was "Bullets or Ballots," etc., etc.

Sid also arranged a special screening for the Mayor and his official family. Cleveland News reporter covered the stunt which resulted in valuable front page publicity.

And in Akron

Harvey Cocks at the Strand through tie-up with Chief of Police promoted a gun and knife display for his lobby (see photo). Chief also issued instructions to every man on the force to see the picture and TO BUY HIS OWN TICKET; the caps are by the Chief as reported by Harvey.

While in Albany

Charlie Smakwitz and Andy Roy at the Strand Theatre received exceptional editorial mention in the Times Union. Paper stressed the current crusade against organized crime and urged that readers should see the picture for information as well as for entertainment.

Attractions Stand Or Fall on Merit

ance must be stimulated by extra promotion, advertising and exploitation. The absence of stage shows does not seem to worry local showgoers, although they do patronize stage fare when it is an attraction that is well known or preceded by strong reputation and national publicity.

It might be truthfully stated that the tendency during recent seasons has been somewhat away from downtown theatres and into the neighborhood houses. This, however, is due to a great extent to the operators themselves. Downtown, for instance, Hamrick-Evergreen circuit controls five first run theatres. Each week two of these houses offer "extended runs" of pictures moved over after one-week first run engagements at other houses. Of the other three houses, one is a dual-run house that is poorly located and shows the "B" type films. Thus, Hamrick-Evergreen offers only two outstanding new pictures weekly.

Jensen-VonHerberg's Liberty theatre, with occasional exceptions, also offers "B" type pictures on dual bills, and Danz's Rex theatre is primarily a vaudeville house with the film a secondary attraction.

In the neighborhoods, such attractive theatres as Evergreen's Egyptian and Neptune, Jensen-VonHerberg's Bagdad, Venetian and Roxy, and Bruen's Arabian give patrons two outstanding pictures on every program, at lower admission prices, and with the same courteous service and comfortable accommodations as downtown. It is only natural that residents of the various sections patronize their suburban houses. This is particularly true when it is realized that the city of Seattle itself is physically spread out over a territory as large as some cities with twice the population. In addition to the de luxe neighborhood houses listed above, there are many others of small size that still offer good dual-bill programs and attract generous patronage.

Attractions Stand on Own Merit

Bank nights and other artificial means to stimulate theatre attendance are not used by either the first runs or subsequent run houses. Most attractions stand or fall on their own merits as entertainment. With the field strictly limited as to the number of operators, there is not the cut-throat competition that formerly prevailed here, and now prevails in other cities. This may be to the detriment of the theatre patrons generally, but it is certainly less expensive and less nerve-wracking for the theatre owners.

The dominating factor in the Seattle area, of course, is Hamrick-Evergreen, a subsidiary of National Theatres, with their first run and second-run holdings. Also strong, however, is Danz's exclusive control of the downtown second run situation and his interest in Bruen's neighborhood circuit. Jensen-VonHerberg, always to be considered, have only one first runner but their three neighborhood houses are important. The balance of the operations in the field are independent, but not strong factors to any extent.

Perhaps with less circuit operation and more competition Seattle people would be stirred into becoming better showgoers—that, however, is a question that probably will not be decided for some time to come.

Gun Gadget Sells Flash Gordon Serial

Assistant Angel Yacono at the Alvin Theatre, Guttenberg, N. J., forwards accompanying photo of gun street display used for his Flash Gordon serial. Outfit was constructed by H. Waldman of the theatre staff and was made from parts of a tea pot, bell transformer, old Christmas tree bulb, glass tube insulators and other stuff lying around the theatre.

Angel reports that both adults as well as kids stopped to press the button which caused the gun to flash and crackle with rapid pulsing action. Ten volt transformer connected to regular house current and small bulb concealed within the red gelatin in the glass barrel provided the action.

Windows Highlight Spencer's "Modern Times" Campaign

C. T. Spencer, Capitol, Hamilton, Ontario, for "Modern Times" secured cooperation of all stores in town handling certain brand of overalls, each of which devoted windows to display with photos and picture copy. Gas company cooperated, devoting window display tying in modern ranges with picture, and men's haberdasher window in-pictures.

Atop his marquee Spencer planted a 42-foot cut out of Chaplin, which was illuminated at night and discernible from some distance. Stories with art were planted in papers plus serialization.

TYPE ADS USED TO SEE DATES

Included in the spread of newspaper ads reproduced on the next page are type ads reported as working out effectively for the members who created them. Two-column ad headed "A Message to Picture Goers" is offered by Manager Tom Olsen, Warner's Aberdeen, Aberdeen, Wash., and the two-column spread headed "I Apologize" is sent on by Charley Schlaifer, Omaha Tri-States Theatres ad head.

I APOLOGIZE!!!

That's an unusual thing for an advertising man to do, but this is an unusual instance. We have had thousands of inquiries at the OMAHA THEATRE regarding the picture "SHOW BOAT" now playing there, asking if this picture has played before.

That has placed me in an embarrassing position with my boss and with you and you. In my enthusiasm in selling "SHOW BOAT" I failed to forcibly call your attention to the fact that this picture is completely new, and has never been seen on any screen before its national release date of May 18 (last week).

You don't have to take my word for it. Just ask the thousands of Omahans who have seen "SHOW BOAT" and read what your two newspaper critics, Jack Reel in The Bee-News and Keith Wilson in the World-Herald had to say about it. It's as new as the Graf Hindenburg!

"SHOW BOAT" was just completed a month ago at a terrific cost and IRENE DUNNE, CHARLIE WININGER (of radio Show Boat fame) and the others in this really great show are ... well ... just see for yourself.

You see, to prove to my boss that I really didn't make a mistake, I have talked him into holding the picture over through Friday, so that you who have inquired about it may have time to see it.

I'll Be Seeing You at the OMAHA THEATRE.

(Signed) THE "AD MAN."

A MESSAGE TO PICTURE-GOERS!

Last Summer the writer was preparing an ad on a picture. It was apparent that the regular ads would not properly convey to prospective patrons its outstanding merits.

So a "personal message" type ad was written with a sincere effort to inform its readers that this was not just another good production, but one that deserved to rank high among the successes of the year.

The response to this "personal message" ad was most gratifying, but far more gratifying was the sincere praise given the picture by our patrons.

That picture was "The Informer." Six months later it was selected as the best picture of 1935.

Today the writer has the same problem. A picture opens Saturday that he feels merits another "personal message" and that it will be among the best in 1936.

But mere words can hardly do justice to the magnitude, stark drama, breath taking suspense and towering entertainment of "A Prisoner of Shark Island." We only ask that you see it.

Thanking you for previous evidences of confidence in our advertising, we are

Sincerely yours,

WARNER THEATRE, Mgr.

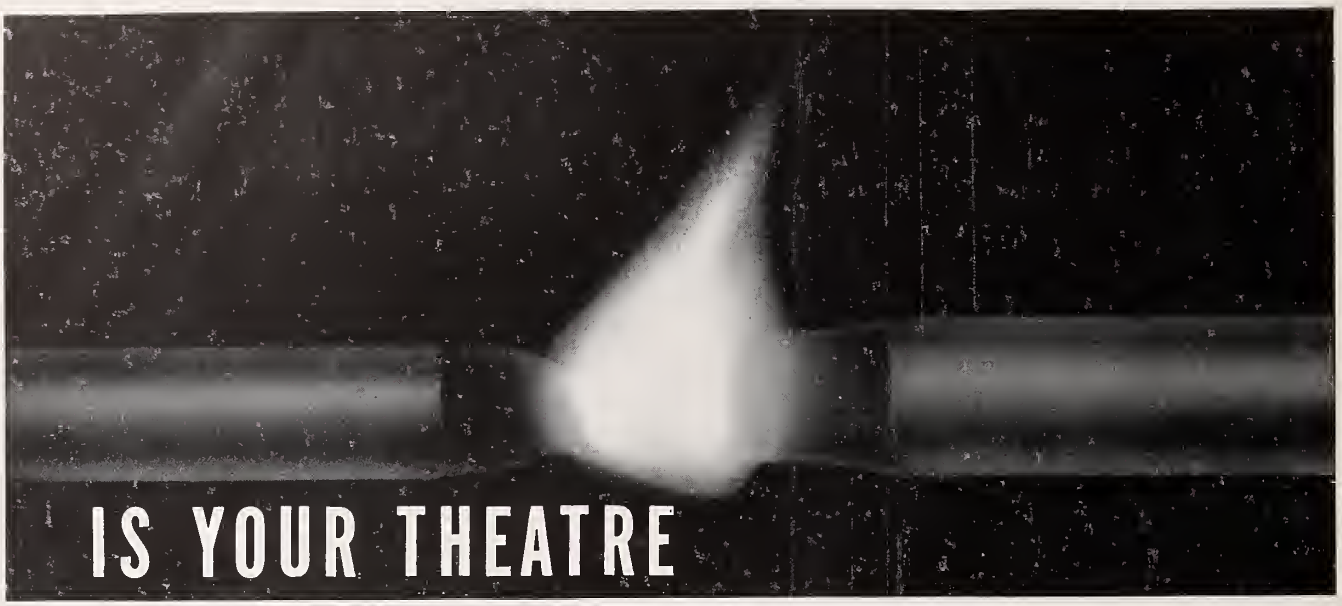
OVER 4000 SUPREX TYPE ARCS ARE NOW IN OPERATION



IS YOUR THEATRE SUPREX EQUIPPED?

THE Suprex High Intensity Arc has been acclaimed as "the outstanding achievement of years" in the field of motion picture projection.

The development of this improved type of carbon arc by the National Carbon Company Research Laboratories puts High Intensity Projection within the economic reach of theatres of small and moderate size.

The advantages of High Intensity Projection are:

A snow white light that gives clarity and depth to black and white productions, and natural color values in color features and sequences.

A brilliancy of screen illumination which allows sufficient supplementary lighting in the theatre for comfortable vision from the moment of entrance.

Take advantage of the patronage drawing power of this superior projection light.

● These views show the interior and exterior of the Weymouth Drive-In Theatre at Weymouth, Mass., near Boston, which was opened the first of June. It originally had ramps accommodating 500 cars, but two more ramps have been added. It is essentially similar to other drive-in theatres, but has certain unique characteristics, especially with respect to sound and projection provisions. It is more fully described in an article on page 8.

1936 Speeding Change In The Theatre Plant

REPLACEMENTS and additions being made in mechanical facilities, building repair and modernization, and construction of new theatres have reached an amount that assures the realization of a vast transformation in the physical plant of motion picture exhibition by the end of the year. Reports on this summer's activity in reconditioning, remodeling and new construction, considered in the light of similar activity during the past eighteen months, indicate that at least 65% of the nation's theatres will be substantially modernized houses or recently erected ones by 1937.

Among the equipment improvements, according to current reports, the classes of apparatus predominating are sound reproduction, projection arc lamps, and air-conditioning. Seating also holds a high place in the current modernization program.

Improvements to buildings emphasize the substitution of modern fronts for those of obsolete styles, redecoration of interior with attendant improvement in acoustic conditions, and interior reconstruction to provide better lounge facilities. Replacement of old carpeting and the installation of modern foyer and lounge furniture also appear rather prominently in the reports. In connection with air-conditioning, roof insulation is getting more attention than it formerly did.

Construction of new theatres is scattered but seems to be holding the quickened pace it set about a year ago. The modern style (or moderne) continues to characterize the designs in general, and the smaller capacities, ranging from 500 to 800 seats, are specified in the majority of cases. Noticeable, however, is some tendency toward a slightly larger average capacity than that obtaining a year ago, projects of capacities up to 1,400 now being less unusual. Some of the more general reports from various sections are briefly given below (others appear in ABOUT PEOPLE OF THE THEATRE, on page 16).

Construction activities in Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi have quickened during the last few weeks as new construction, remodeling and enlargements soared over the $200,000 mark. Two new suburban theatres are planned by Memphians. The Parkview, modernistic in design with slightly less than 1,000 seats and air-conditioned, is being erected at a cost of approximately $50,000 by Joseph Hanover.

Officials of the Rosemary theatre in Memphis, headed by Mike Cianciola, have purchased a lot on Union Avenue for a $30,000 suburban theatre. It will be modernistic in design and completely air-conditioned.

In three Memphis neighborhood theatres air-washer systems are being installed. They are the Avon, Joy and Capital.

The trend in Memphis theatre building is positively modernistic, with aluminum and tile fronts and wide marquees.

Reports from this same area include a new theatre at Oxford, Miss., to cost $25,000; another at Tupelo, Miss., and several in Arkansas. One was recently completed at Wynne, Ark., at a cost of $15,000. M. A. Lightman of Malco Chain has purchased a $7,000 lot at Tupelo as the site of a new theatre. Max Davitts of the Dixie theatre in Winona, Miss., will spend several thousand dollars installing a modern front, remodeling the interior, and enlarging the seating capacity.

In Ohio a substantial building program is in progress, in addition to an appreciable amount of modernization of both exteriors and interiors of present structures. The major building projects recently completed, now under construction or being developed for immediate action, include a new deluxe house at Lisbon, by the Manos Amusement Company of that city, recently incorporated for $200,000 by A. Manos, Toronto, Ohio; Stewart Moreland of Steubenville, and L. R. Riddle of Lisbon. A 700-seat house is to be built at Xenia, at a reported cost of $75,000, by J. L. Hatcher, of Baltimore, Ohio. Hatcher has taken a 20-year lease and will give up his present theatre holdings at nearby Baltimore.

The new Avalon is about ready to open at Marysville, Ohio. It was built by F. E. Price, Newark, Ohio, who, in connection with his brother, V. W., operates the Grand in his home town, the Strand, at Marysville, and the Mystic and Princess, at London, Ohio. The Rex Theatre Co. will remodel the recently-acquired Koehler Building at Pomeroy, Ohio, into a 600-seat house. A new house, known as the Ohio, has been opened by Schines at Marietta as another unit in their rapidly-expanding Ohio chain.

Macolino Bros., produce dealers, are erecting a new theatre at Wellsburg, W. Va., on a site recently taken over. The seating capacity will be 600. At Morganstown, W. Va., Dr. and Mrs. C. P. Church, who operate the Burt theatre, will construct a new house directly across the street from their present one. Victor Rigaumont, Pittsburgh theatre architect, pre-

WHERE PEOPLE WITH POOR HEARING LIVE

● They live everywhere, these people who are definitely hard-of-hearing. The federal government has found that they comprise 14% of the nation's 120,000,000. And they are distributed pretty consistently throughout our communities, from big cities to small towns.

Consider a town even so small as Excelsior, Minn. It has a population of only 1072, yet a single manufacturer of hearing aids has sold devices for personal every-day use to 80 of its inhabitants. There may be others who are as deafened, using devices of another make, and still others whose deafness, while not great enough to require personal aids, prevents them from hearing screen talk clearly and without strain.

There is Tonganoxie, Kan. Though it has but 1109 inhabitants, a single manufacturer has sold hearing devices to 61 of its citizens. Similar figures are available for Mt. Holly, N. Car., which has a population of only 2254, and 201 persons known to require hearing devices. And Puyallup, Wash.—population, 7094; inhabitants who have bought hearing aids from a single manufacturer, 306. For another example, Colton, Cal., where 435 of 8014 inhabitants have bought hearing devices from a single manufacturer. Apparently, severe deafness is common enough to make group hearing aids standard equipment in the motion picture theatre, now that the screen must be heard as well as seen.

We think the cost of theatre hearing aids and the potential "take" directly resulting from their installation, advises this view. To return to Excelsior, Minn.: If but 60 of its 80 citizens known to be severely deafened, went to "the movies" 40 times a year, paying an admission price of 25c, their attendance would mean $600 a year to the box office. That amount would more than pay for the equipment the first year. The motion picture's "lost legion" can be reclaimed at a profit. And let's not underestimate the value of its gratitude.—An Editorial.

pared the plans. The seating capacity is 500.

The Minnesota Amusement Company is building a new theatre in Rochester, Minn., and another in Mitchell, S. Dak. In Sioux Falls, S. Dak., this same firm has remodeled the old Royal; in Mankato, Minn., it has reconditioned the State. In St. Paul, the St. Clair has been remodeled throughout and air-conditioned, while in the Park and Capitol air-conditioning equipment has been installed. In Minneapolis, the Arion has been remodeled and given a new ventilating system. Other projects are also contemplated by the Minnesota Amusement Company. The Nile theatre in Minneapolis is being remodeled by Sydney Volk, the owner, and other construction and remodeling plans are under way in this area.

New theatres have been recently completed or are in the course of construction in about ten Wisconsin cities. In Beloit work has begun on a new $100,000 house to seat approximately 800. The house will be operated jointly by T. M. Ellis and C. J. Goetz. La Cross Theatres Company has begun a $50,000 renovation program at the Majestic theatre in La Crosse. When the enlarged house, to seat about 1,200 persons, reopens sometime in August, it will be known as the Wisconsin. In the same city, Welworth Theatres has announced plans for a 1100-seat house to be ready about September 1.

Remodeling and refurbishing in the Kansas City area have been well above last year's mark. Summers in this territory have become, since the droughts set in four or five years ago, very severe, and for long periods the mercury has been climbing to 100 or above day after day. Consequently, theatres without air-conditioning have faced a constantly dwindling return during the summer months. This has stimulated air conditioning equipment sales. However sales have been mostly of air washers and blowers. The more expensive types of air conditioning equipment, while moving, are doing so slowly. Remodeling and refurbishing jobs are small but numerous.

The most ambitious remodeling program reported in recent weeks is that of Fanchon & Marco in St. Louis. About $1,000,000 will be spent in remodeling the Missouri, Ambassador, Grand Central, Rialto, Orpheum and High-Pointe. John Eberson is the architect engaged to effect the changes.

A $100,000 program has been started by the Jefferson Amusement Company in Port Arthur, Tex. The Strand will be given a new front, new lobby and larger stage, and air-conditioning equipment will be installed. The Pearce will also be extensively remodeled. This circuit is constructing a new theatre, the Peoples, in the same city.

Many New Devices Among Dealer Exhibits

THE SIXTH annual convention of the Independent Theatre Supply Dealers Association in Chicago early this month broke all records from the standpoint of manufacturers represented. More than 40 prominent makers of theatre equipment were present at the meeting and displayed their wares. It was necessary for both the East and West Lounges of the Edgewater Beach Hotel to be converted into display rooms for the many exhibits. Previous years have found one of these rooms ample for the exhibition.

Many new developments in theatre equipment were shown at the convention and experts were on hand to demonstrate and show the new devices. Maurice Goldberg, head of the GoldE Manufacturing Company, had a large booth where he displayed the new GoldE Model H automatic rewind, the GoldE Rainbo motion color spotlight, the GoldE Stereopticon, a new 1,000-watt spotlight and other products. The motion color spotlight and the GoldE automatic rewind attracted particular attention.

G. J. Kalwitz, Joe Truitt and Tom Brown of the Autovent Fan & Blower Company of Chicago, had a display for the first time in a number of years. The G-M Laboratories, Inc., had a large display of electrical appliances which included their suspended coil D'Arsonval galvanometers, Visitron photoelectric cells and numerous other products. As usual, the National Carbon Company had an interesting exhibit. W. C. Kunzeman and E. R. Geib were in charge.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Kaplan of the Kapland Manufacturing Company of New York, displayed their latest types of projection equipment. Another who had projection equipment on display was Karl Brenkert of the Brenkert Light and Projection Company, of Detroit who had one of his Enarc lamps mounted on a revolving pedestal, spotlighted.

The C. S. Ashcraft Manufacturing Corporation, of Long Island City, had on display the new Ashcraft copper oxide rectifier for two suprex arcs. C. A. Ashcraft and Mary Ashcraft represented the company.

M. A. Summerour of Summerour & Devine, Inc., Kansas City, was a newcomer to the convention. His new product, a lighting system called Color-Glow, elicited much favorable comment and created a wide interest among dealers. This lighting system offers a changeable color system for theatre lighting.

Prominent was the booth of the Wenzel Company of Chicago. This concern displayed new universal base for projectors, their Model 17-S amplifiers in both the single and dual channel types, also a number of carbon savers and film splicing machines. Max Wenzel was present to answer queries regarding this equipment.

M. F. Klicpera was the representative of the Operadio Company of St. Charles, Ill. He demonstrated their new Model 250 dual channel theatre amplifier with matched speaker. Horn baffles and speaker units were also shown.

R. E. Wilson was the representative of Best Devices, Inc., of Cleveland, displaying a variety of spotlights. The Best "Wonder" spotlight was featured. The Imperial Electric Company exhibited motor-generators in several sizes and types.

Theatre chairs of late design were shown by three companies. The International Seat Corporation of Union City, Ind., was represented by J. George Fineberg. William Gedris, was in charge of the display for the Ideal Seating Company of Grand Rapids, Mich., and C. E. Phillips of North Manchester, Ind., represented the Peabody Seating Company.

The Forest Mfg. Corp., of Belleville, N. J., displayed their motor changeovers, mercury foot switch, and copper oxide rectifiers. J. K. Elderkin had charge of the showing. The Garver Electric Company was another concern displaying rectifiers. F. Garver represented his concern at the convention.

The DaLite Screen Company was represented by J. C. Heck, head of the company, and C. H. Roessner. Herman and W. C. DeVry shared space with DaLite and showed their camera equipment and various other products.

Theatre furniture was shown to the conventioneers by the Lloyd Manufacturing Company of Menominee, Mich. C. B. Dalrymple and A. McGill had charge of the display, which featured a smart array of modern lounge and foyer furniture.

R. P. Bedore of the Chicago Cinema Products Company, was on hand to represent his firm and show their line of equipment.

played under the supervision of F. L. Slade.

The Baldor Electric Company, with George Schock in charge, displayed their Rect-O-Lite rectifiers in several types.

The Rex Airate unit, made by Air Controls, Inc., of Cleveland, was demonstrated by J. Paul Kraft. From Denver came Jacob Goldberg to take charge of the display for the Goldberg Brothers, makers of projector appliances and film rewinders. The Goldberg aluminum sound reel, which has the new inside lock and comes in both 1,000- and 2,000-foot sizes, got a great deal of attention. Mrs. Rueschle of Rochester, N. Y. represented the LeRoy Sound Equipment Company, makers of soundheads and other sound equipment.

Shown in bright colors and in modern streamline designs, the Motiograph projectors formed one of the more impressive displays at the convention. Walter Hirshfeld, Leo Daniels, Ray Sherman, C. C. Lade, J. A. and W. R. Howell were in attendance at the Motiograph booth.

Oscar Neu of New York was on hand as usual to greet his many friends and show them the latest in Neumade projection room equipment. The Viking Air Conditioning Corporation of Chicago, had on display some of the equipment which is part of their Cir-Cool-ator. E. J. Vallen of the Vallen Company of Akron, displayed and demonstrated recent developments in curtain controls and tracks.

Harry Strong and Lee White of the Strong Electric Company were on hand to show the Strong Mogul projection lamp and other forms of electrical equipment.

Among the newcomers to the dealer convention was the Universal Welding Company of Pittsburgh, which was represented by John Kulen, local executive. Mr. Kulen displayed various pieces of the Eweldco theatre furniture line.

The Largen sound system, with its gyroscopic filter, was shown at the meeting by the Scott-Ballantyne Company of Omaha. R. H. Stahl was in charge of this display.

A wide range of bulbs of all types and sizes were displayed by the Tele-Radio Corporation of Newark, N. J. J. A. Frucht was in charge of this display, which featured the Gordos rectifier bulbs. Universal Electric Welding Company of Long Island City, was represented by Miss L. S. Lackman. This company featured a number of welded wire reels. The Continental Electric Company, with Richard Smiley in charge, exhibited its Cetron photocell. Edward H. Wolk, Chicago equipment dealer and manufacturer, exhibited a variety of projection apparatus.

Coin changing machines were displayed by the Universal Stamping Machine Company of Chicago, with A. M. Pollock on hand to handle inquiries. The General Register Corporation of New York, had a large display of Master Gold Seal ticket registers on display, featuring the new models recently brought out.

Syncrofilm projectors in several models were displayed by the Weber Machine Company, with C. H. Weber in charge. The latest type shown was a semi-portable sound projector.

F. J. Nuber, representative of the Dictograph Company, was in charge of that company's exhibit of Acousticon hearing aids.

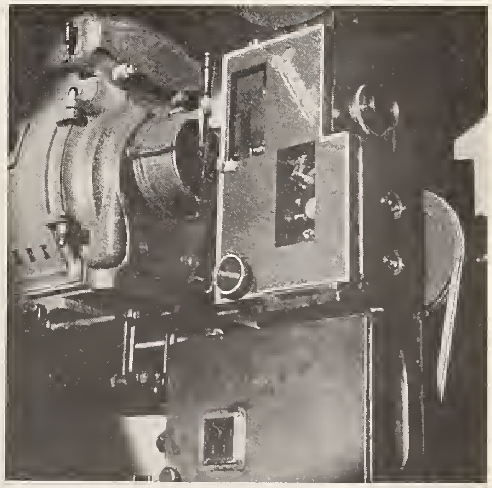
D. S. Hill of Chicago, represented the Supreme Instruments Corp., which displayed testing devices. The Supreme 385 automatic tube tester was a recent development displayed.

Following the final session of the convention which ended June 8, the executive members of the organization held a special meeting behind closed doors to lay plans for the coming year. Those attending the meeting were H. W. Graham of Denver, newly elected president; K. R. Douglas, of Boston, re-elected vice-president; J. E. Robin, executive-secretary, of New York; W. J. Katz, of New York, treasurer; and George McArthur of Detroit, J. C. Hornstein, of New York, A. F. Morrone of Pittsburgh, and B. F. Shearer of Seattle, directors. Questions of policy were considered with respect to the formation of other theatre supply dealers groups, such as that being promoted by George De Kruif.

New 35-Millimeter Unit Sound Projector

A PROFESSIONAL 35-millimeter projector combining both projector mechanism and soundhead in a unit so designed that it can be mounted on a Powers 6-B base, has been brought out by the Weber Machine Corporation of Rochester, N. Y. Features of the design are:

Adjustable tension on film shoes, intermittent removable as a complete unit, intermittent parts such as cam and star of standard type, gate readily removable for cleaning the aperature; framing knob on the front of the machine, case and parts of aluminum copper alloy castings; all shafts running in bronze bushings.



The casework is finished in black crackle enamel and polished chrome plate.

These Drive-In Theatres, or Movies Through a Windshield

● Commenting descriptively upon a quaint method of exposing Americans to motion picture entertainment, with special reference to its latest example

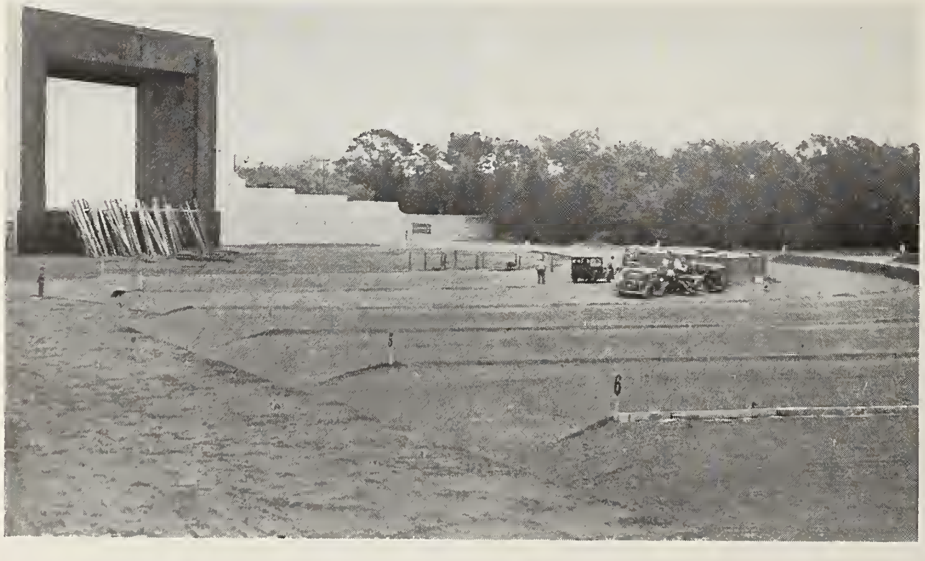
ANOTHER ONE of those "drive-in" theatres has opened, and there are signs that others are in the offing. The latest one is the third of these unique al fresco cinemas, at least of those which run to vast dimensions. The first is in its fourth season.

If a slogan were needed, one might suggest, "Join the movie-motorists and see your Hollywood darling through a windshield." It isn't quite accurate, however, to measure these strange "theatres" merely with levity. Despite the obvious crudities of the performance as presented, and certain unavoidable discomforts imposed upon the patron who has really motored in to see and hear motion pictures, a good many people like them.

Why? One answer is that they afford a grand retreat for young love—just park and spark, as it were. On the other hand, attendance is by no means characterized by amorous youths. Adults who are patently fathers and mothers, frequently with a car full of youngsters, are to be observed driving in. Indeed, Everett H. Mattix, manager of the Drive-In theatre in Camden, N. J., which, as the first theatre of the kind, started it all, reports an increase in attendance this year over last year and declares this is because he is building up a very good family trade.

The second drive-in theatre, which opened last summer, is located on a busy highway between Los Angeles and the sea shore. The newest, which got underway a few weeks ago, is situated at Weymouth near Boston, on a highway to Nantasket. All of these theatres, if that term may be applied to them, are essentially similar—a wall enclosing a large area divided into ramped, semi-circular driveways radial to a shallow structure housing the screen and speakers. There are certain differences, however, in the sound systems of the three theatres here cited, partly due to the fact that Los Angeles and Camden have RCA Photophone apparatus, while the Weymouth has Western Electric. These differences will be noted here presently.

The latest of the species, the Weymouth Drive-In theatre, owned by Thomas DiMaura and managed by James Guarino, was opened with ramp accommodations for 500 automobiles, but two more ramps have been added, bringing the distance between the last ramp and screen to 700 feet. Each ramp (equivalent to row in a regular theatre) is 10 inches above the one ahead of it. Automobiles are parked 50 feet apart. Unlike the Camden theatre, where the ramps are of concrete, those at Weymouth are of dirt surfaced with sod, and only the curbing is of concrete.



The Weymouth theatre during construction, showing the ramp system.

The projection equipment is housed in a small structure just in front of the center of the first ramp, as is the case at Camden and Los Angeles. The focal length of the projector lenses is 3 inches, and the image is 50 feet wide. Lamps are Hall & Connolly high-intensity pulling 180 amperes. The screen material is an asbestos composition, unperforated, for the horns are not behind it.

Speakers and horns are behind grilles in the upper part of the screen house. There are eight speakers, with an output of 100 watts. Four of them are Western Electric Type-15, and four Type-22, hooked up in parallel. The amplification system consists of four units.

An interesting adjustment in the mechanical relationship of projector mechanism and soundhead was made in an effort to accommodate the system to the relatively great distance the sound has to travel. P. Edward Comi of the Theatre Service and Supply Company, who was in charge of equipment installation, removed the lower takeup sprockets of the projectors, which are Simplex, providing a special chute to keep the film from vibrating after leaving the intermittent. This shortening of the "travel" of a frame from projector aperture to sound aperture gives the sound something of a head start on the image, the reflected light of which of course travels much faster than sound.

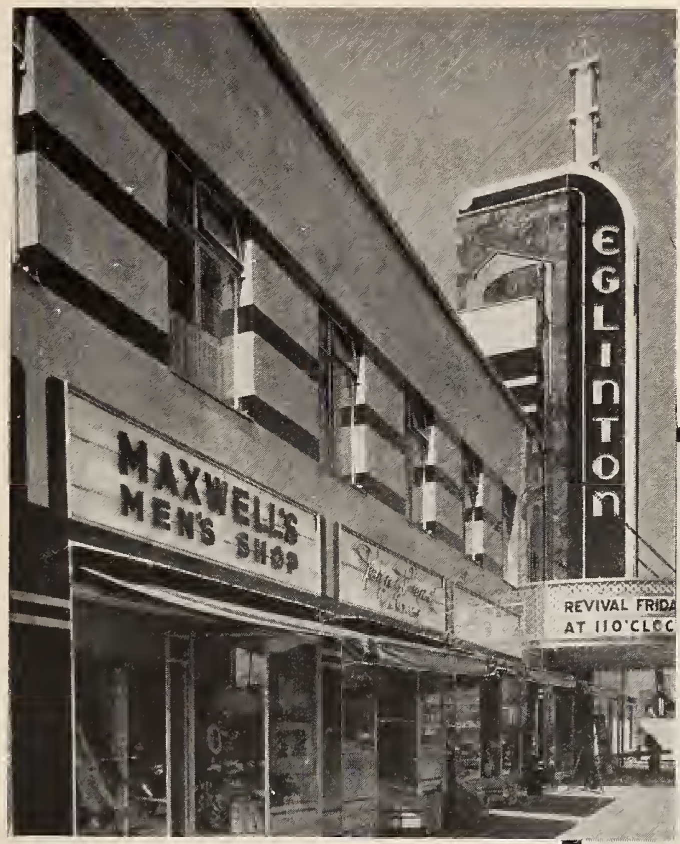
In the Los Angeles drive-in theatre is another peculiar adaptation to the great distance from the screen characteristic of the type. There, as a result of complaints that the horns at the screen constituted a public nuisance, a speaker was provided for each car. Permanent magnet radio type speakers are clamped to the ramp guard rails, one in front of each car (there are thus 485 of them), actuated through trunk lines from the amplification system.

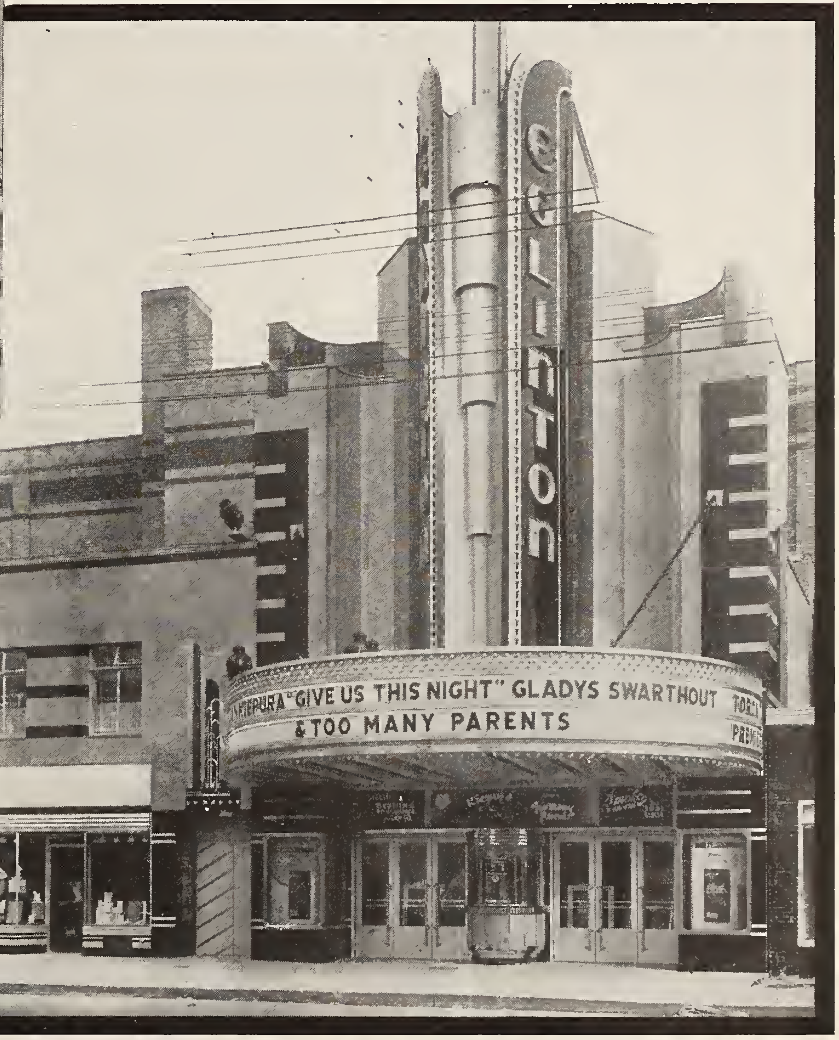
In addition to provisions for automobiles, there are benches placed in front of the ramp area at all of the three drive-in theatres for those who want to leave their cars. The Weymouth and Los Angeles theatres charge 35c per person, while that at Camden charges 25c, with no charge for children under ten years old.

Each of the theatres shows twice nightly, with features and shorts. The Los Angeles enterprise has double bills, getting features 35 days after downtown Los Angeles and Hollywood. It operates all the year around.

Modern Styling In a Compact Stadium Design

- Describing Toronto's new Eglinton theatre, a thousand-seat house patterned in a pure interpretation of moderne and with a floor plan emphasizing economy in the use of space





Two views of the front, showing the integral treatment of display structures and facade.

IN STYLE, the new Eglinton theatre in a residential section of Toronto, Ont., is a pure interpretation of moderne; in plan, it presents certain special seating and traffic arrangements dictated by peculiarities of site. It is a one-floor house seating 1,080. The architects were Harold S. Kaplan and A. Sprachman of Toronto.

The Eglinton is located on Eglinton Avenue, business artery to Forest Hill Village, one of Toronto's most exclusive residental areas. The village is a town within a city, with its own schools, fire and police departments and busses, but with few commercial buildings or industrial structures. The new theatre probably the most moderne in design of any theatre in metropolitan Toronto, has drawn patrons from all parts of the city, attracted by its reputation as a show place. Including the site, the building with stores and dental offices, furnishings, chairs and all projection and mechanical equipment, cost approximately $200,000.

The overall dimensions of the building are 124 feet (frontage) by 110 feet.

Construction consists in exterior walls of brick backed up with a haydite block. The wall columns and roof trusses are steel and the rear section of the auditorium (loge circle) is in concrete. The office building unit has concrete floors and roof over steel joists with masonry bearing walls. The tower is built up from the office roof in brick and tile with concrete slab over.

GENERAL PLAN

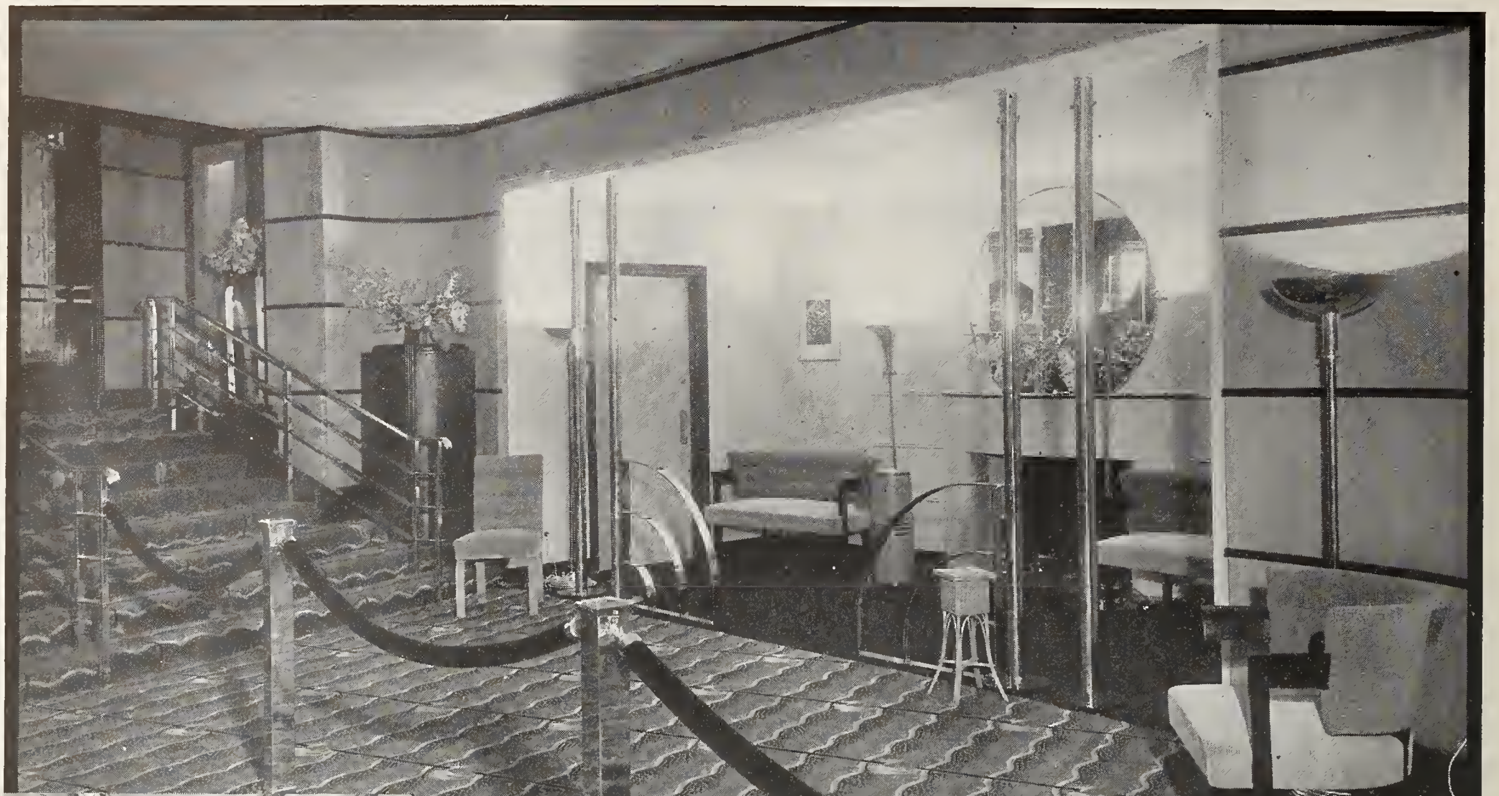
The plan [see drawing] is complicated by the irregularities of the lot. Making the foyer a parallelogram was a logical solution to the problem.

The Eglinton is a one floor house with entrance to the auditorium from the lounge to the cross-aisle. The section behind the cross aisle is 4 feet higher than the orchestra section and is ramped. The public rooms are all under this loge circle. Public rooms include lobby, vestibule, foyer and waiting room, main lounge, women's and men's lounges and toilets. The manager's office and stair to basement are off the waiting room.

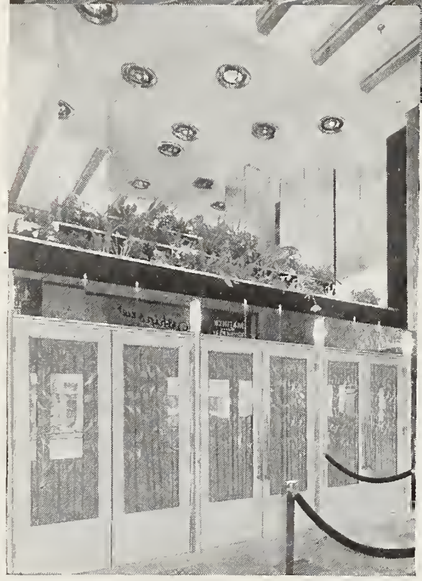
The projection room is hung over the rear of the loge circle with access by a door on the side aisle at the rear.

PROJECTION

The projection gallery is 75 feet long with an average depth of 12 feet, having re-wind, generator and rectifier rooms and lavatory accommodations in addition to the projection room proper. The latter is 12x18 feet. It has an acoustic plaster ceiling, while the walls are painted battleship



The foyer partly sunken beneath the stadium and with an alcove for waiting patrons.



Lobby doors leading to foyer, surmounted by a decorative feature consisting in a photoelectrically actuated fountain in a garden setting that is backed by a mirror.

gray. The projectors are Simplex with Peerless Magnarc high intensity lamps. Projection arc current rectification is by a Hertner 550-volt, 25-cycle, 3-phase motor-generator. The sound system is Northern (Western) Electric. The throw is 108 feet, and the projection angle is 11°.

AIR CONDITIONING

The air conditioning system provides for heating, cooling and dehumidifying under automatic control. Refrigeration is by water from the city mains, the source of which, Lake Ontario, provides cold water throughout the summer.

The conditioned air is introduced into the auditorium through nine main outlets, and three minor plaques on the soffit of the projection room. These latter also have exhaust grilles for drawing back smoke laden air from the loge circle, where smoking is permitted. There are three return air trenches in the orchestra floor. In the loge circle, the space between the floor and ceiling of the public rooms contains a plenum chamber.

The lobby, waiting room and main lounge are supplied with conditioned air through wall grilles. There is a concealed unit heater in the lobby. The rest rooms and toilets are heated with radiators. The heating for the stores and offices also is done with radiators. Fuel for heating is oil.

THE FRONT

The entire facade on Eglinton Avenue is surfaced with structural glass in various colors, predominately green and black.

The tower, rising 50 feet above the sidewalk, has a vertical pattern and is designed to be a support for the sign of which it forms an integral part. The sign is surfaced with black Vitrolite and has neon letters in red and two rows of travelling bulbs on one edge. A semi-circular trough divides the faces of the sign. This trough has five semi-circular corrugated troughs planted on it, with light shining down at each lower edge.

The marquee is semi-circular in plan, with continuous letter space for aluminum silhouette letters on flashed opal glass ground. There are three rows of travelling letters over top, and neon at bottom.

The top of the tower is crowned with a pylon and a flashing neon ball.

The box office is a feature of the design and is made of black Vitrolite, stainless steel and red Catalin with a Vitrolite base and red mouldings at the top. The front is circular in plan with bent plate glass. The Catalin and the open bottom are illuminated by tubes of neon. Display boxes flanking the entrance have chrome doors and frames.

THE LOBBY

The lobby floor is in removable squares of rubber matting in three colors, predominately yellow. The dado is a dark pink mirror 8 feet high with tiny chromed finials, with a Vitrolite base. In a recess on top of the dado are three neon tubes on a flasher to give seven color changes.

Above the dado the walls are covered with gold paper in a falling spray design. The center of the ceiling has five metal troughs with concealed bulbs to illuminate a flat white ceiling recess. The ceiling adjacent to the recess is in gold leaf.

Upon entering the lobby, the patron automatically turns on an illuminated fountain by breaking a beam of light trained on a photoelectric cell. This fountain, in full view upon entering, utilizes space over the vestibule. It has six cone-shaped spinnings with spray nozzle. There are six reflectors over the sprays, throwing red, green and blue light.

The foyer is entered from a small inner lobby with walls of quartered oak Flexwood with horizontal black wood strips. There are two black wood urns trimmed with a panel of 20 pieces of opal glass with a continuous classic design. There is a public phone closet located immediately off this room.

FOYER AND WAITING ROOM

The foyer is down eight steps from the inner lobby. At right there is a small check room with Dutch type door. At the left is a waiting room. These rooms are divided by four chromed columns and two small chromed rails on top of the carpet. There is a simple mantel of plaster with black glass hearth and backing with circular mirror in the waiting room. The carpets are black, while the walls and ceilings are yellow.

The foyer walls are covered with quartered oak Flexwood with black wood strips. The ceiling is yellow, the carpet predominately bluish gray.

A special feature of the foyer is a circular ceiling trough with central pointed drops of eight concave facets where three tubes of neon, operated on a flasher, permit illumination in seven color changes.

MAIN LOUNGE

This room is immediately off the foyer. The carpets are the same as those of the foyer. The walls have an oak dado 2 feet high. The balance of the walls is plaster with pleated plaster pilasters. The dado is blue gray, while the upper area is buff with darker tones on a tree and foliage design between the pilasters.

The ceiling is dark brown, graduated in four tones to gray adjoining the walls. The ceiling recess is yellow with a special hanging fixture supplying indirect lighting.

On the right-hand wall upon entering is a Vitrolite mantel in black and gold with an upper mantel mural flanked by flesh-colored mirrors. This mural, which is by John Clymer in collaboration with the architects, is neo-classic in feeling and consists of three draped female figures supporting a Greek vase. The figures are in light tones pointed in dark purple, with gold hair against a grape vine design against a scarlet background.

On the left-hand wall upon entering the lounge is the stair to the auditorium cross-aisle. It is flanked by Belgian black marble columns. Adjoining is an ornamental drinking fountain.

This fountain as well as the urns in the foyer and the mural are illuminated by concealed lighting. All the metal railing work in the lobby, vestibule, foyer, waiting room and lounge is chrome. The furniture, designed by the architects, is in coral, black and gray.

walls of brown Fabrikoid, with horizontal copper strips about 2 feet apart. The ceiling is torquoise blue. There is a ceiling trough for concealed lighting at one end. The doors and trim are in scarlet. The furniture is of copper tubing, with fabric in black and red.

The toilet has two water closets and three urinals. The walls are of white tile with black trimmings. The floor is of ceramic tile.

WOMEN'S LOUNGE

The women's lounge is entered from an alcove off the main lounge and has the delicacy and grace of a woman's boudoir. The color scheme is blue and white. The floor is covered with a blue carpet having a dark blue border. The walls are blue, and the ceiling is in two tones of yellow. The trim is off-white. At each end of the room are mirror recesses for specially designed dressing tables. The tables are in bone-white trimmed with dark blue, while stools are in bone white with light blue, patterned fabric. The rest of the furniture is in bone white, light blue and yellow. Each mirror and table recess is draped with yellow silk.

Off this room is a small childs' room and lavatory with child-size fixtures. It has a blue-carpeted floor and yellow walls bearing characters from animated cartoons in black.

The women's toilet room has three water closets, two lavatory basins and a china drinking fountain. The ceiling is in strips of two tones of yellow. The steel partitions are bright red. The walls are of black tile with white trimmings. The floor is of ceramic tile.

Fireplace with mural in the lounge.

AUDITORIUM

The auditorium is divided into two parts by a cross-aisle—the orchestra or front portion, and the loge circle, which is 4 feet above the cross-aisle and ramped up to the back.

The seating is arranged with two center and two side aisles. There are 24 rows in the orchestra section, and 11 rows in the loge circle. The seat ends were designed by the architects to harmonize with the decorations. Chair seats are of the spring-edge type with rubber arm rests. Each seat contains 40 springs.

The walls are covered with patterned black velour above a painted dado. The velour is stretched over space filled with rock wool and wire netting, which effects the acoustic treatment required. Above the velour is an off-white frieze of pleated plaster.

The side walls are divided by ornamental lighting features over the cross-aisle extending from the exits to the ceilings.

Should Each Theatre Business Be Incorporated?

● Comparing the legal advantages and disadvantages of the corporate form as a substitute for the partnership form and for individual ownership

By LEO T. PARKER

A SHORT TIME ago a theatre owner in a small city wrote as follows:

"I am about to have a law suit. Last winter an employe who had been with me for many years, intended to accept an offer to manage another theatre in this city. In order to induce him to stay with me, I took him in as my partner and gave him a small interest in my theatre business. It seems that he lost considerable money at gambling and failed to account to me for money which he took out of the theatre receipts. Also, without my knowledge, he accumulated a large amount of debts in the operation of the theatre, while I was under the impression that these debts were being paid by him from the theatre receipts. These creditors are suing me. Am I liable and can I prosecute this fellow for taking money from the partnership business?"

The answer to this question is: A partner cannot be prosecuted for stealing from the partnership, and any solvent partner is liable for payment of all debts and obligations assumed by any other partner in the ordinary operation of the business.

The reason for this established ruling of the law is that each partner in a partnership business is legally a "general" agent for the business, and he is impliedly authorized to complete all transactions relating to the business without authority or consent of the other partners. Moreover, since a partner has a financial interest in the business he cannot be prosecuted for appropriating money or merchandise, because the law assumes that a person cannot perform the act of stealing from himself.

PERSONAL LIABILITY IN A PARTNERSHIP

THE COURTS have defined that a partnership is a written, verbal or implied contract of two or more persons to place capital, labor and skill, or some or all of these, in a lawful business and to share the profits and bear the losses either equally or in predetermined proportions. All of the capital may be supplied by one of the partners, and the others may contribute skill, labor or services. However, each partner is individually and personally liable for all debts of the partnership business incurred by any and all of the partners.

FORMAL PARTNERSHIP

While the important advantage of an ordinary partnership theatre business is that two or more persons may unite their money, labor, services and ability for the purpose of operating a theatre, the great disadvantage of a partnership is that any one partner, or other person, who leads creditors to believe that he is a legal partner, may be personally liable for the total debts or obligations of the entire partnership providing the other partners are insolvent.

For example, in a recently decided higher court case, one partner invested $15,000 in a theatre business. The other partner had no money to invest, but agreed to supply his services and manage the business. The partnership business was not successful and became indebted to the amount of $9,000 above its assets. In this case, the partner who had invested $15,000 was wealthy and therefore was held liable for the full amount of the liabilities of $9,000 to the creditors, since the other had no money.

IMPLIED PARTNERSHIP

A partnership may be implied by the law and persons who do not intend to be partners may be liable for the obligations assumed by the partnership. For illustration, the law often implies that a partnership exists for the sole purpose of holding a person who has assets, liable for the debts created in the business venture. This may be accomplished where a person, who is not actually a partner, permits a partnership to use his name, or when he performs any other act which leads creditors to believe that he is financially responsible for debts of the business.

On the other hand, if no debts or obligations are incurred by a partnership business, or the members did not intend to form a partnership business, there is no necessity that the law should imply that a partnership is in existence. When a court interprets an agreement to determine whether a partnership exists as between the parties themselves, the prior agreement of the parties always controls; and if a person merely lends his name to a partnership business, he is not a legal partner with respect to the other partners.

PARTNER PRIVILEGE

Another important point of the established law is that one partner actually may appropriate money, valuables or merchandise of the partnership without being criminally liable to the other partners. And any one partner may bind all other partners on a debt or obligation, which relates to the partnership business.

For instance, in one case a partner, who had no money invested, without knowledge of any of the other partners, signed a contract relating to the business. All of the other partners were held liable on the contract, which resulted in heavy financial loss to the partnership.

In fact, any act of a partner performed within the scope of the partnership business is legally equivalent to the act being approved by all partners. In other words, although a partnership is composed of several members, either one of the partners has exactly the same authority to bind the partnership firm to the same extent as an individual owner of a business may obligate himself.

Obviously, however, a partnership business is not bound by debts incurred by a partner and not relating to the partnership business. For instance, where a partner in a theatre business borrowed $10,000 which he appropriated to his own use, the partnership was held not liable for the debt because the loan was not used in the business.

And in another case a partner, while supervising the construction of a theatre, purchased a large quantity of brick which he used in the construction of his personal residence. In this case, also, the higher court held the partnership not liable for payment of the debt for the brick.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP

Many States have enacted laws under which limited partnerships may be formed. While partnerships organized under these laws are restricted to an extent, yet the partners' liabilities may be limited to specified amounts. Notwithstanding the advantages of organizing a partnership business under these laws, very few limited partnerships are in existence. Probably the reason is that few persons know that laws of this nature have been enacted in the different States.

Generally speaking, the expense of organizing a limited partnership, by which the liabilities of the partnership is limited,

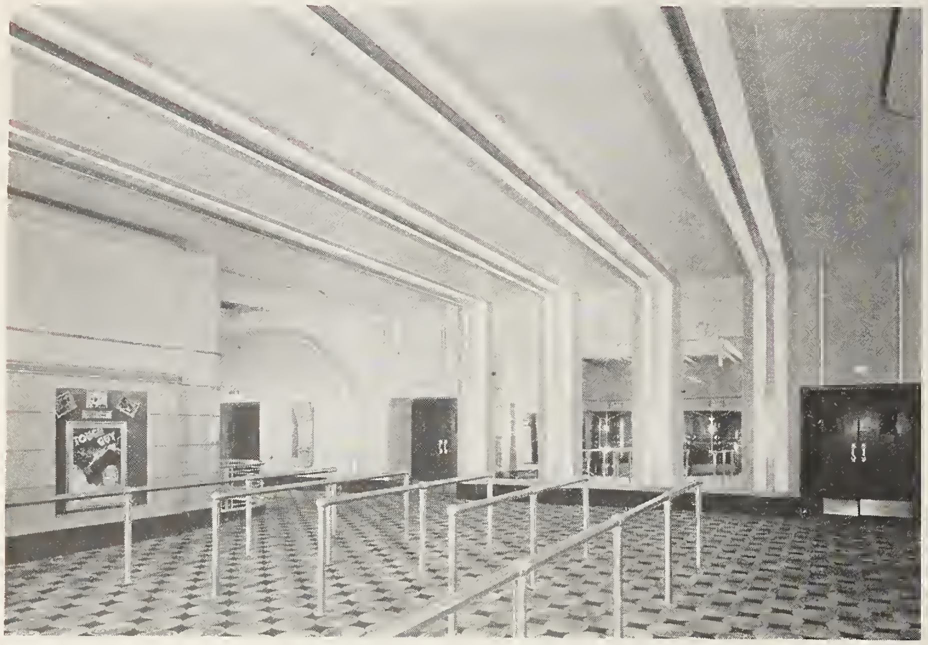
A One-Floor Plan for 1400 Seats



The lobby, looking toward auditorium and sub-level approaches.

• A description of the Lake theatre, a Loew house in the Chicago suburb of Oak Park with a colorful modernistic interior and deep, five-bank auditorium

THE LAKE THEATRE in Oak Park, Ill., marks the entrance of Loew's into the Chicago theatre scene, which so long has been peculiarly Paramount (Balaban & Katz) territory with Warner assuming neighborhood importance in later years. Oak Park is a suburban "village" of 65,000 inhabitants situated contiguous with Chicago's West Side. Its population is in general to be classified as upper middle class.

The Lake, which gets its name from the street on which it is located, is modernistic in style with a plan placing 1,400 seats at one level. Thomas W. Lamb was the architect. Besides the theatre, the building, which measures 110x194 feet, contains four stores. It is constructed of steel and concrete with brick retaining walls.

The plan is of a simple type, consisting in a vestibule, a lobby and the auditorium on the ground level, with traffic in direct line; and lounge provisions in a sub-level beneath the entrance area. This forward sub-level is the only excavated portion, and here is also housed the air-conditioning machinery.

The front is faced in limestone in a plain block formation relieved by a built-up central feature consisting in alternate channels and ribs flanked on one side by a slightly taller pile to which is anchored a two-way vertical sign. This sign carries the name of the theatre in cut-out metal letters painted white and outlined in red neon. A similar but smaller one extends across the front of the marquee. The marquee is rectangular with neon borders and Wagner silhouette-lettered attraction boards.

Belgian black marble used for bases beneath the store display windows and in the vestibule is continued into the lobby. This is a detail of a consistency maintained throughout the decorative treatment, which is unified by means of a color scheme dominated by red, rust, rose and orange in various blendings. The entrance doors on the vestibule side are in an orange-red taken from the lobby carpet, on the lobby side these doors match the dark blue of the carpet background. These doors, as well as those to the auditorium, are faced with Formica. The rubber mats covering the vestibule floor (by O. W. Jackson) also take their coloring from the lobby carpet, being of the orange-red found in the figures.

The box office, which has an island location, and display cases in both vestibule and lobby, are trimmed with aluminum.

THE LOBBY

In plan, the lobby is T-shaped, turning behind the shops on either side with four sets of doors to the auditorium, two in the side areas, two facing the sides of the central portion. The latter are separated by three mirrors embellished with an aluminum fleurette and extending from the marble base to the ceiling. These bordered by lighting troughs which continue forward in four strips to the front wall. The troughs are lined with metal painted white, which reflects light from incandescent lamps concealed in a suspended channel.

Except for specific decorative features, walls and ceiling are of plaster. The walls are painted an off-white and bearing painted stripings in accordance with the orange-red, rose-rust color scheme. The ceiling is painted in extremely light rose. At the side walls the display cases interrupt shallow horizontal steppings painted, in sequence beginning at the base, rose-red, apricot, peach and yellow. All of these colors are variously present in or suggested by the coloring of the carpet, which is a Wilton by Hardwick & Magee.

A distinct variation in this general lobby pattern is introduced at the side portions, which in addition to giving further access to the auditorium, contain the stairways to the lounges. This variation has the effect of separating the lounge approaches from the main central portion of the lobby. It consists in a curved band emanating from the lobby decorative scheme, but bordering a wall surfaced with Tekko wallpaper in a block effect, the texture of which is reddish brown in mottled tones with gold-leaf flecking. Within this papered area on the auditorium side is a recessed bubbler fountain of Rose Altica marble. In the middle of the side wall a narrow mirror rises from base to ceiling and bordered by slightly raised plaster strips painted orange-red with gold striping. The ceiling, like the carpeting, is continuous with the central section of the lobby, but here there is a lighting fixture consisting in a plaster disk suspending a circular cluster of Lumiline lamps. The stairway guard rail is of chrome metal.

Wing of lobby with stairs to lounge.

LOUNGE

The main lounge, reached on either side by stairs from the lobby as previously described, is a circular chamber off of which are smaller men and women's lounges, with their adjoining toilet rooms. The walls are covered with white leather in a block formation similar to the Tekko pattern observed in the side sections of the lobby. The floor is covered with a Chase seamlock carpet in a circular pattern made up of sections in a variety of sizes and colors ranging from browns and maroons to tans and yellows. Modern-style chairs and sofas—the latter following the circular contour of the walls—are upholstered in combinations of leather and fabric. Adjoining each stairway entrance is a recessed fountain of Rose Altica marble. Centered in the ceiling is a variation of the lighting fixture design used in the lobby.

AUDITORIUM

In plan, the auditorium is essentially rectangular, but is slightly rounded at the

A DEPARTMENT OF PRACTICAL MAINTENANCE AND OPERATING SERVICE

● ● CONDUCTED BY J. T. KNIGHT, JR. ●

Proper Care of Terrazzo Floors and Interior Marble

● How installation should be made and cleaning should be done in order to prevent chipping, buckling and loss of the original beauty

OF ALL THE permanent parts of a theatre building, that which is most frequently neglected is the floor. Even if it were true that the condition of the floor, good or bad, clean or dirty, did not have any bearing on box office grosses, the condition of the floors would be nevertheless an indication of the age of the theatre and of the care taken of the property. (No reference is made here to floor coverings, such as carpet or linoleum.)

Much money is being spent, and quite properly, on redecorating, new furnishings and new seats, yet seldom is the proper though given to the floors. Yes, the maintenance of the floors is supposed to be the responsibility of the janitor, and managers are never aware of their existence—until they have been damaged beyond the point of reconditioning for any reasonable sum of money.

Terrazzo is again becoming a very popular material for floors, especially for lobbies and ticket vestibules, and even for sidewalks. Perhaps this is because it lends itself to modern patterns and color combinations. There are in existence in theatres some very beautiful terrazzo floors, some of which may not yet be beyond the point where they can be materially improved in appearance by proper treatment. In many theatres there will undoubtedly be laid some new terrazzo floors. These should be laid properly, then cared for properly, so that they have long life and continue to contribute to the beauty of the theatre.

It may be of interest to some of you to know something of the history of terrazzo. It is supposed to have had its origin in Venice some time before the year 1500. The laying of terrazzo floors was an outgrowth of the beautiful mosaic floors laid by the Romans. Venetians, noted for their sculpture, were curious to find some use for the many chips of the various beautiful marbles struck off in their sculpture work. The idea of using these chips for floors occurred to them. The problem then became one of finding a proper and adequate bonding material to hold the chips together. This problem solved, terrazzo floors came into existence. Its popularity as a flooring has risen and fallen, and these periods can be detected by examining important buildings of various periods now in existence.

PROPER LAYING OF TERRAZZO FLOORS

TERRAZZO IS at this time supplanting marble to a very great extent for at least two reasons: first, it costs far less to lay; and second, it is effective, being varied in color and design.

Terrazzo is a mixture of various kinds and colors of marble chips and cement. The marble chips are supposed to bear the traffic and resist the wear, and the cement is just to hold the chips together. Terrazzo is obtainable in precast tile usually about 9 inches square and from ¾-inch to 1 inch thick. Sometime the tiles are made larger in size, but seldom thicker.

By using the precast tile a limitless number of combinations of colors and patterns can be obtained, forming designs of exceptional beauty and theatrical effectiveness. There is, however, one every serious drawback to the use of terrazzo: terrazzo cannot be patched or repaired with anything like a proper match of the existing material; the repaired portions usually differ so much from the original that the repair is almost as bad as the defect.

To make terrazzo, a certain combination of colored marble chips in a given proportion is mixed together. The chips are then thoroughly mixed, in the dry state, with one part of cement to three parts of chips, and after complete intermingling of the chips and cement, water is added. Just sufficient water is added to make the mixture a stiff, workable mass. After more mixing, moulds are filled and the mould then put under pressure. It is then allowed to set and cure for a period of days, after which it is removed from the mould and the surface of the tile is ground and polished.

SUB-FLOORING

All terrazzo tile floors are laid on a subflooring of concrete. It is generally in the laying of the sub-floor that cracking of the terrazzo results. The sub-floor should be laid only to within 3 inches of the height or elevation of the finished floor. This allows for two to 2¼ inches of cement under the terrazzo and above the sub floor. A rich mixture of cement and sand, generally one part of cement to three of sand, is placed on the sub-flooring and the terrazzo tiles laid in a pattern on this still soft base.

AVOIDING CRACKS

All terrazzo tiles should be soaked in water before laying on the cement base in order that they bond properly with the base. Great care should be taken so that each tile has a solid bearing on the soft cement base. It is because of bad workmanship in placing tile and not having good bearing that individual tiles crack soon after a floor is laid. When the entire floor is finished, it is allowed to set and harden for four or five days; if the weather is damp or rainy, it may require seven or eight days to harden. Then the entire surface is ground smooth with a grinding machine.

Some authorities recommend that a sand cushion be placed between the structural slab and the terrazzo floor. From observation of floors laid both ways, this practice is not recommended for theatres where traffic across lobbies is usually concentrated over a small area. It is the consensus of persons familiar with terrazzo that if the FREON AND OIL—To a question recently asked me concerning Freon, I gave substantially the answer I give here. It may help others who have Freon compressors in their theatres.

Freon absorbs small quantities of lubricating oil, the amount absorbed depends upon the characteristics of the oil used (flash point and viscosity), the temperature of the oil in the crank case, and the operating back pressure in the compressor crank case, but unlike other refrigerants (other than hydrocarbon refrigerants) it does not deposit the lubricating oil in the expansion coils on the low pressure side of the system, and therefore does not cause loss of efficiency or oil clogging.

CARPET SELECTION—It is becoming very apparent that smaller groups of theatres are reverting to the old policy of ten or fifteen years ago in buying carpet replacements on a price basis only. Many are buying cheap weaves of carpet, or else they are buying odd lots of better carpet of patterns that have been discontinued by the mills. This is certainly shortsighted, because carpet for theatres receives such hard wear that to buy anything cheaper than proved quality weaves is extremely costly.

For your information, Wilton carpet is the best for theatre use. Wilton carpets are made exclusively on the jacquard loom, and by a Federal Trade Commission ruling no carpet that is not manufactured on a jacquard loom can be called a Wilton. Wiltons are manufactured in both wool and worsted qualities of yarn. The weave is very tight, and the hardest and most resilient yarns are usually used in its construction. The real worsted Wilton is the best wearing.

FAN SPEED—It has been frequently noted that theatre managers or maintenance men step up the speed of centrifugal fans without consideration of the additional load on the motor. Several instances have been observed where the odor of the motor being overheated can be detected in the auditorium of the theatre. Because of the many makes, shapes of blades, particularly with reference to their curvature, whether forward or backward, with reference to the direction of the rotation, it is impossible to give anything but a general rule of thumb governing the changes in the fan characteristics due to a speeding up process. This general rule is:

1. The capacity of the fan increases directly as the speed (r.p.m.) of rotation is increased. If the speed is increased to double the original speed the fan will deliver twice as much air.
2. The horse power (required to drive the fan) increases as the cube of the speed increases. If the speed is doubled the horsepower increases eight times.

The only proper way to direct the increasing of the fan capacity is by reference to the manufacturers' rating tables. For example, we will assume fan A is of XYZ manufacture. We count the r.p.m. of the fan with a revolution counter and then refer to the XYZ catalog. We identify the fan as an XYZ No. 8, operating at 247 r.p.m. with an outlet velocity of 900 feet a minute, delivering 11,640 cubic feet a minute, and it is powered with a one-horsepower motor.

We have in mind doubling the speed of the fan, so we look further down the table and find a rating at 493 r.p.m. ($2 \times 247 = 494$). At this speed the fan will handle 32,333 cubic feet of air per minute, with an outlet velocity of 2500 feet per minute. It will require 8.27 horsepower to drive the fan.

The above figures are actually taken from the catalog of a leading fan manufacturer.

Please note the speed has been doubled, the capacity or output of the fan in cubic feet per minute has been more than doubled, and the motor horsepower has increased from one h.p. to 8.27 h.p. ($2^3 = 2 \times 2 \times 2 = 8$), the cube of two (twice the speed).

So it does not take much increase to overload a fan motor to the point where the motor will be destroyed.

finished floor is bonded to the structural sub-floor slab, cracks due to the settling of the building will be transmitted to the terrazzo floor. This is undoubtedly true, but any appreciable settling in the structure is going to crack the terrazzo regardless of how the floor is laid. It has been observed that fewer cracks occur in terrazzo floors when laid as above outlined than when laid on a sand cushion.

After the grinding of the floor, the surface should be vigorously scrubbed with stiff brushes (only fibre or bristle brushes should be used). Hand scrubbing is not sufficient, a scrubbing machine should be used. Immediately after the floor has thoroughly dried as the result of the scrubbing, and before traffic is permitted on the floor, a filler should be applied to the surface. This filler will seal the pores of the marble chips exposed and the surface of the cement. It will preserve the uniform appearance of the floor and reduce future maintenance costs.

This detail is given here because during the past year it has been observed that some theatre managers have let contracts for lobby floors, one man paying as high as $3.50 per square foot, and it is quite evident that he never did have the floor properly finished. Because the floor was so badly finished, it is reasonable to believe that it was also laid with the same indifference and questionable workmanship.

POURED-IN-PLACE FLOORS

The most beautiful terrazzo floors might be termed poured, or poured-in-place floors. The mix for poured-in-place floors is just the same as for making terrazzo tile. It is always standard practice for the contractor to furnish sample tile as to color and texture, for approval before starting to lay a poured-in-place floor. Poured-in-place floors always crack easier than terrazzo tile floors because, while the tile is put into a mould and then under positive pressure, the poured floor is only rolled.

Terrazzo concrete for use in poured-in-place floors should be of the driest consistency that it is possible to work. It can readily be seen that the concrete mixture made too thin will permit the marble chips to sink to the bottom, thereby causing the finished surface to show too much exposed cement and a bad pattern of chips. The proper time to correct such an error is while the floor is being laid, not when it is finished and ground. A thin mixture is much easier to work and there is less chance of disarranging the metal dividers forming the pattern, but the thin mixture will result in a very drab and ordinary floor regardless of the variety and richness of color in the marble chips.

Metal dividing strips should always be used to outline the pattern or the design. These strips, though frequently as thin as 20-gauge metal, are more distinctive when of heavier material. The strip should be set so that it projects above the finished elevation of the floor. In this way it is ground down during the grinding process of the floor to a true surface of the floor. By this method the metal strips form a brilliant part of the beauty of the floor.

A floor was recently inspected that had been laid only about a year ago. The strips had been carelessly placed so that in some places they extended above the finished level, and in other places below the finished level. The result after grinding was that in spots the metal highlighted the pattern, while in others, where the metal should have shown, there was only a dirt-filled crevice in the floor. It's too bad to spend money for terrazzo and get such poor results.

PROPER CARE OF TERRAZZO FLOORS

AS TO THE proper care of terrazzo floors, which is composed largely of marble, I quote herewith from Circular Letter LC-388 issued by the Department of Commerce, Bureau of Standards, Washington, D. C.:

> It is good practice to clean these floors periodically with a vacuum cleaner. The routine washing of these floors is usually carried out by first wetting them with clear water and then mopping with hot water containing a small quantity of alkaline cleaner, such as washing soda (about 2 ounces per gallon of water), trisodium phosphate, or sodium metasilicate (about half an ounce per gallon of water). Badly soiled areas on the floor may be cleaned with a scouring powder, or a little scouring powder may be sprinkled over the soiled areas before applying the alkaline cleaning solution. Occasionally, the entire floor should be scrubbed with a scouring powder or with an alkaline cleaner and the scouring powder. A motor-driven scrubbing machine is a desirable appliance. After cleaning, the floor should be thoroughly rinsed with plain water and wiped dry. If water is left standing on a tile floor it might loosen the cement that holds the tiles in place. Soaps are not generally used on these floors owing to the tendency to "build up" slippery films, especially if the water is not soft or the rinsing has not been thorough. However, such floors are sometimes wiped up with a cloth wrung out of hot, soapy water, rinsed off, and wiped dry. If soft water is used and the surfaces are thoroughly rinsed after cleaning, it is believed that soap would be satisfactory, but more expensive, for the routine cleaning of these floors.

The foregoing is worthy of the careful study of every manager and janitor who has the responsibility of maintaining terrazzo floors. The treatment as outlined was applied to a very old terrazzo floor and it was astounding to note the improvement in the appearance of that floor.

CLEANING OF SOLID MARBLE

I HAVE FOR several years advised against the use of alkaline cleaners for marble or terrazzo floors, but having observed so many unsightly lobby floors with dirt ground into them, or slippery, dirty films of soap on them, I quote this approved method of reconditioning such floors. It should be noted that only very small quantities of alkaline cleaners are used—an excess of alkali will ultimately harm both marble and terrazzo. To substantiate this statement, which has previously been made, another quotation is given from the Bureau of Standards Technologic Paper No. 350, entitled "A Study of Problems Relating to the Maintenance of Interior Marble" (now out of print). The following conclusions are reported in that paper (references to polished marble such as wainscotting, toilet partitions, pedestals, etc., do not apply to floor tiles):

> 1. Various cleaning preparations have been studied with a view of determining the effects on marble of certain ingredients from a long period of use. The laboratory experiments, as well as examination of actual installations of marble, have indicated that injury may result from injudicious use of harsh grits or from salts as sodium carbonate, sodium bicarbonate and trisodium phosphate.

2. The usual type of grit employed in trade cleaning preparations is not appreciably injurious to marble floors or other unpolished marble. Polished marble should rarely be cleaned with preparations containing scouring agent or abrasive which is harder than the marble. [Note—Inspect the conditions of the marble toilet partitions in your theatre. You will see now why they no longer have polished surfaces. —J. T. K.]

3. As a rule, the volcanic ash grits are less severe in abrading action than crushed quartz. This is evidently due to the difference in shape of the particles. [Note—This was emphasized in BETTER THEATRES some two years ago.—J. T. K.]

4. While it is seldom, if ever, necessary to use a cleaning preparation of the scouring type on polished marble; where it is in stock for cleaning the floors of a building it is apt to be wrongly used on the polished marblework. For this reason a cleaning preparation of this type is desirable which has grit that will not injure polished marble. Available minerals which seem to meet this requirement are soapstone and talc.

5. A trial preparation consisting of 90% powdered soapstone and 10% soap powder appeared to be as effective in cleaning marble floors as any of the present trade preparations. Such a composition can be used on polished marble without appreciable injury. [Note the small percentage of soap.—J. T. K.]

6. Injury which may result from the frequent use of such detergents as sodium carbonate, sodium bicarbonate and trisodium prosphate is mainly a physical effect due to these salts crystalizing in the pores. This action has been demonstrated to be severe enough to cause disintegration of marble when such salts are employed without proper precaution. [This was also emphasized some time ago in BETTER THEATRES.—J. T. K.]

7. Experiments have indicated that marble work may be safely cleaned with mild solutions of such detergents if the surface is rinsed with clear water before applying the cleaning solution.

8. Although soap has been found objectionable for use on marble in certain instances, the present study has indicated that if used with soft water it will give satisfactory results and prove to be a safe detergent for general service. [Note.—Is the water used in your theatre hard or soft?—J. T. K.]

9. Preparations containing a colored ingredient of different color than the marble may gradually impart that color to the marble. This, however, may be to some extent prevented by a preliminary rinsing, as described in Paragraph 7.

10. Ammonia water has been used to some extent in cleaning polished marble, but a limited number of tests in this investigation have indicated that it may cause yellow discoloration.

11. Acids dissolve marble, and even the use of such weak acids as oxalic will prove injurious. Although cleaning of interior marble with acids has been practiced to some extent, it is usually done through ignorance of the real effects. [Note.—I ran across a theatre where the manager did not know that the janitor was using a weak muriatic acid solution to mop the lobby! Only a few drops in a bucket of water, but the acid effect showed plainly.—J. T. K.]

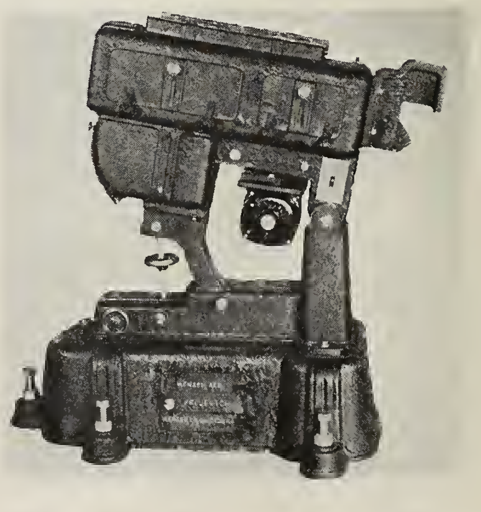
12. Stains which have penetrated the marble usually have to be removed by means of a poultice treatment. Several types of stains demand special treatment, and there is no single cure for all cases. Methods have been found for eradicating practically all of the common stains occurring on interior marble. [Note.—The poultice treatment was covered in BETTER THEATRES, outlining the methods by which the most common stains may be removed from marble in theatres.—J. T. K.]

In the great rush to modernize, redecorate, and rehabilitate theatres in this country, there has been a great tendency to "go modern" and tear out all marble. This is mainly due to the fact that marble in theatres has received such atrocious care that it is now in a condition wherein it's cheaper to do away with it than to recondition it. Marble still has its place as a building material and its costliness, permanence and beauty justifies at least intelligent care.—J. T. K.

Base for Any Model Projector and Soundhead

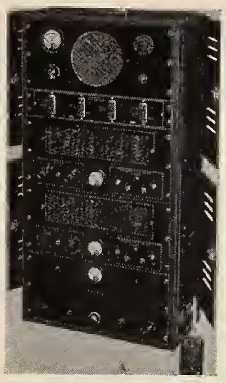
A FIVE-POINT universal base designed to be adapted to any standard theatre projector, has been brought out by the Wenzel Company of Chicago. The base has a micrometer adjustment sideways so that when the projectionists removes the lens to clean it, the base can be moved easily sidewise to attain alignment with the screen. The up-and-down adjustment is by means of a ball-bearing tilting device, which includes provision for locking in place.

There are two machinist levels, one to level the base crosswise, the other to level it lengthwise. The motor is located beneath the machine stand and screws on the base, which has a one-point pivot to eliminate play in the belt connecting the flywheel to the soundhead. By changing a front bracket, the base may be adapted to any type of soundhead.



The base includes two compartments for carbons, one for short carbons, the other for long ones. There is also a front compartment for the storing of tools, oil cans, etc. The switch cabinet is cast on the upper frame and contains a 100-ampere switch. The pedestal has five leveling screws arranged for attachment to either cement or wood floors. The entire base is finished in crackle enamel in either black or green. All screws and knobs are nickel-plated.

Nine Sound Systems Based on A Single Amplifier

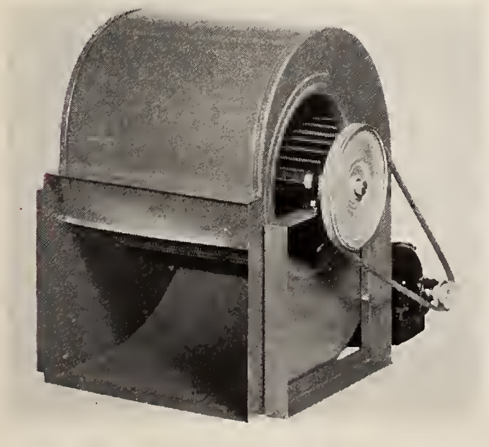


NINE TYPES of theatre sound systems developed by Lafayette Manufacturing Company and distributed through the Wholesale Radio Service Company of New York City, are based on the same amplifier, Lafayette Model 400-A, here illustrated. The response curve of this amplifier is given as within 5 decibels from 50 to 10,000 cycles, with harmonic content at ordinary volume in the order of 1% to 2%. Forty watts output power can be obtained when needed through the use of beam power tubes, 6-L-6. Two 6-L-6 tubes are used in the 400-A amplifier. At maximum output the harmonic content is 5%.

The systems based upon this amplifier offer a.c. or d.c. exciter lamp supply, choice between the two methods, depending upon whether sound quality down to 120 cycles is wanted, or whether the full available frequency range is desired. Single channel and dual channel amplifying systems are available, and remote control of changeover can be applied to the d.c. exciter system.

The monitor panel is equipped with an output meter calibrated in decibels, needing only a "buzz track" or variable frequency test film for all standard sound tests and repair checkup.

In dual amplifier systems a multiple switching panel is included, and repairs to the amplifier or to either projector can be made by means of the monitor speaker and decibel meter while the other projector and amplifier run the show as usual.



Model of blower adapted to theatres manufactured by the Taylor Manufacturing Company of Grand Rapids, Mich.. It is of all-metal construction and is equipped with rubber-mounted ball bearings. It is available in three capacities, from 1850 to 5000 c.f.m.

GOODBYE DUST!
HELLO CUSTOMERS!

Remember the first time you opened your theatre? New seats—new rugs—new decorations — everything to attract and hold the public. Why not keep it that way?

You can't stop the public from tracking dirt in, but with a Spencer Vacuum Cleaning System you can remove it before it becomes dust and before it spreads to all parts of the house.

The finest dust is the part that wears the floors and carpets, lodges on decorations and eventually gets into the projection room. Spencer Vacuum is the one method that can quickly and surely reach down into a rug, pull dirt from under the seats, and remove the finest dust from the stage or the smoothest or roughest floor surfaces in the building.

Spencer Systems save cleaning time, increase the degree of cleanliness and are built to give reliable and efficient service over long periods of time.

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE DEPARTMENT DEALING WITH ARCHITECTURAL DESIGN AND MATERIALS, DECORATION AND FURNISHINGS

ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES: One of the principal functions of this department is to answer inquiries pertaining to preliminary considerations in the planning of a new theatre or the remodeling of an existing one. All questions receive the personal attention of Peter M. Hulsken, A.I.A., contributing editor of this department and a practicing architect who long has specialized in theatre design. He will be glad to offer advice, suggestions and criticism. Working plans, however, cannot be supplied. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Better Theatres, Rockefeller Center, New York. In publishing replies, only initials are used for identification.

THE QUESTION:

SOME TIME AGO I wrote you regarding the building of a new theatre. Since that time the location of the proposed theatre has changed, so I am taking the liberty to write you for advice again. The lot is 44 x 130. We wanted to have two small stories, one on each corner and use center for lobby. How wide will space have to be for lobby? Also, how deep can we make the two stories and have room for about 350 seats? The lot has an alley on left-hand side and also one in rear.

I believe it would be better to have ticket office on the street and have a foyer by using a part of the space in lobby, as would not want to start the auditorium in front of the rear of stores, making the main auditorium without offsets. Would figure on two toilets in foyer.

Is hollow building tile okay for rear part of building? Might also use cement blocks. Kindly give estimated cost of building and what is cheapest to use—brick, tile blocks or what. Would want the front brick, of course.

Can you tell me if it is possible to get a government loan to build this?—F. G. P.

THE ANSWER:

THE BEST seating arrangement for a theatre of 44 feet wide is a center bank of fourteen seats across, with aisle on each side, and two wall banks of three seats each, giving 20 seats across the width of the auditorium. To obtain 350 seats you will require 18 rows, or a depth of seating area of 45 feet.

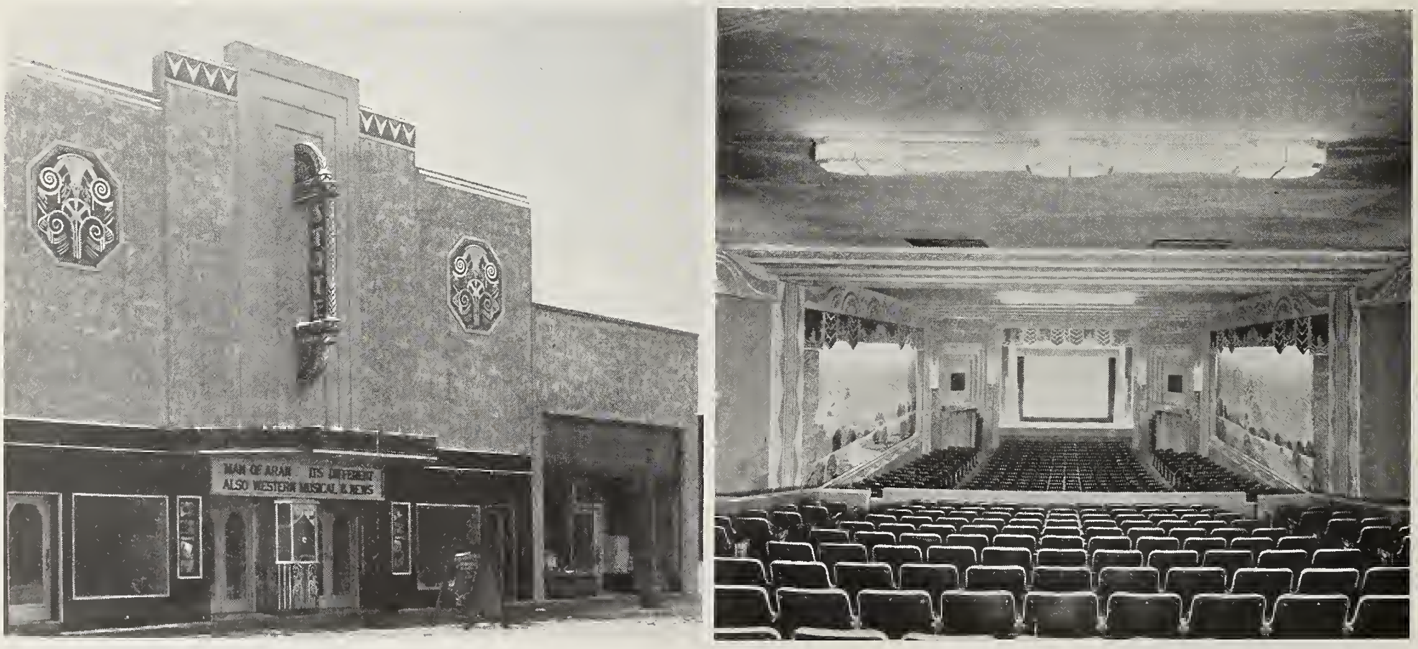
As you did not mention a stage in your inquiry, you probably want only a screen platform. Figuring 25 feet for space between rear wall and first row of seats, you will have 60 feet for foyer and lobby. For this type of a theatre a 10 foot wide foyer will answer the purpose. I suggest that you make the width of the lobby 14 feet. This will make the stores about 13 feet, 6 inches wide.

Place the box office right on the sidewalk line. Set the entrance doors about 6 feet in back of this booth.

If you figure the depth of the store about 25 feet, there will be sufficient space to take care of a men's and a women's room behind each store.

Hollow tile or cement or cinder blocks are all right for economical construction. The least expensive materials are the blocks. The minimum cost of such a theatre will be about $25,000, exclusive of any equipment.

Some F. H. A. loans have been granted for remodeling theatres, but I doubt if such a loan could be obtained for a new building. You might write the Federal Hous-



Front and auditorium views of the new State theatre in Algona, Ia., owned and operated by Gale Petit. The State seats 800 and was erected, furnished and equipped at a cost of $75,000. The architect was L. P. Larsen, while construction and equipping was in charge of Frank A. Van Husan, manager of the Western Theatre Supply Company of Omaha. The facade is stucco with black glass ornamentation. The marquee is traced in neon, which continues across the front. A mural on each side wall are features of the auditorium decorative treatment. They are painted on monk's cloth and illuminated from behind a valence. Seating is by the American Seating Company, carpets are by Mohawk, and air-conditioning is by a Kooler-Aire system. Projection equipment consists of Kaplan projectors, Western Electric sound and Brenkert Enarc lamps ing Administration, U. S. Department of Commerce Building, Washington, D. C.

THE QUESTION:

I AM ENCLOSING a rough sketch of what we have in mind and would appreciate any advice or suggestions you might care to make. The population of the town is only about 700, but there are several smaller inland towns that are close and to which there are good all-weather roads. All through the depression, with only 225 seats, this small theatre has made money. It is a wealthy inland town—no railroad. The nearest town in which there is ever apt to be another picture show is 23 miles away. Others 24, 25 and 23 miles in four directions.

Would you use concrete for the main floor? The land has plenty of slope or fall, so very little excavating or filling would be necessary. Acoustic plaster for the walls, we think, would be the proper thing, but where can it be obtained?

For the ceiling we have been thinking of some form of wallboard, something that would paint well.—W. B.

THE ANSWER:

AFTER CAREFULLY reading your description of the local situation and conditions, I am of the opinion that a small theatre may make some money provided that it is built as economically as possible and that the overhead is kept to the minimum. According to your sketch, the location of your proposed theatre seems to be very good. I believe it is a good proposition to provide for rental spaces on each side of lobby, but I do not advise the construction of a balcony, as this increases the cost.

There will be enough space behind each office to provide for men's and women's rooms. Since you are providing for only a small platform large enough for the screen and speakers, it may be less expensive to build the boiler room under the offices and lobby. By all means have a concrete floor for the auditorium.

Acoustical plaster may prove a bit expensive in your case. I suggest that you inquire of a plasterer or building materials dealer in your locality.

It is my opinion that if you intend to use this material, it be installed on the ceiling and at the rear wall, instead of the side walls, as you indicate.

The least expensive method, I think, would be to use sound-absorbing tiles or boards. Fabric panels on plastered side walls will not only be decorative, but will also improve hearing conditions.

THE QUESTION:

THERE IS a new building going up here out of which I can probably get 22x90 feet, perhaps 24x90. Neither the buiders nor myself know anything about the way it should be built and I will appreciate answers to a few questions on attached sheet. I plan 300 seats downstairs and a small balcony, about 50 seats, for colored patrons. We figure we can put 50 seats in the balcony in a space of 13 feet from back wall. I have planned that we could have 27 rows of eleven seats downstairs.

1. What is minimum height for building, screens 10 feet, 4 inches in height?
2. How high should screen be from floor?
3. What is advisable minimum elevation for floor?
4. Is cinder block good sound material for outside wall?
5. Is ½-inch Masonite or Celotex okay for ceiling and other side wall?
6. Is it okay for projection booth to be on one side?
7. Would you advise one aisle down center, or leave off one seat in each row and have aisle down each side?
8. What size blower should I have to cool this, also can I buy steam heating to be blown by same blower?
9. Is 31 inches plenty room from back to back of seats.
10. We are in small town of 1,000—is it very disadvantageous to have this theatre upstairs?—J. C. C.

THE ANSWER:

YOU STATE that you may be able to obtain a floor space of 24x90. By all means try to get it, as it is far better than the 22 feet width. By planning for two wall aisles, you will obtain eleven 20-inch seats, which will take 18 feet, 7 inches overall, leaving sufficient space for wall aisles.

It will be impossible to place 50 seats in the balcony in a space of 13 feet from back wall, as space must be provided for projection room and balcony stairway.

1. If balcony is provided for, the minimum height for auditorium is 21 feet, 6 inches from the high point of the auditorium floor; without balcony, 17 feet.
2. If no platform is used, the screen should be 4 feet above the floor. If screen stands on platform, it should be 12 inches above the platform floor, which should be 3 feet, 4 inches above the auditorium floor.
3. Four feet; 4 feet, 6 inches will be better.
4. Yes.
5. Yes.
6. It has been done, but of course no such location is to be suggested. Place it so that the projectors can be properly spaced on center with the screen.
7. I never advise the use of a center aisle if it possibly can be prevented, as it takes the place of the best seats.
8. Not being familiar with your State code governing air changes, I cannot advise you.
9. Yes, in small theatres 30 inches is sufficient.
10. It generally is. My advice is to take this matter up with the local or State building inspector.

The Radial Seating Plan And Why It Is Preferable

THERE ARE two reasons for curving the rows of seatings in a motion picture theatre plan. The more important reason is that the curvature permits each seat face the screen so that the occupant can sit parallel to the arms of the chair and not have to turn his eyes or head to follow action on the screen. The drawing shows the method of checking the curvature to determine if the patron is facing the screen properly.

As noted in the diagram, the patron seated comfortably in his seat should be able to view almost the entire width of the screen within a range of vision of 20°, within which is confined the limits of distinct vision. The curve used, if at all possible, should enable the obtaining of a full view of the screen with its range.

Present practices indicate flatter curves than those in which this method would result, for the reason that the rows in the front of the auditorium are usually too close to the screen, in which case this method would cause a radius too sharp for practical chair installation. With proper distances from the screen to the first row of seats, the suggested method for determining the curvature can be used, resulting in curvatures entirely practicable for chair installation.

The second reason for curving rows of seating deals with the factor of appearance. The curves obtained when the consideration of proper vision is used as a basis, also form lines that are pleasing as well. It should be noted that the pattern of chairs on a theatre floor is a vital part of the decorative scheme. As a matter of fact, one often merely needs to combine good lighting, simple walls of good proportions, and the right chair pattern, to obtain the desirable decorative quality.—BEN SCHLANGER.

Suprex Arc Peculiarities And Methods They Advise

• Offering an explanation of real and apparent current variations observed as an effect of suprex carbons, and suggesting operating procedure

By J. K. ELDERKIN

SEVERAL characteristics of the suprex arc have been noted but heretofore they have not been clearly or generally known. These characteristics have been puzzling to many projectionists. This article represents a sincere effort to explain them and to offer some practical suggestions that should help projectionists to adjust their methods to them, so that the best results may be obtained with the least amount of confusion.

The first of these characteristics is that of low current after striking the arc, and the gradual build-up of current to normal after from a half-minute to three minutes of operation.

CURRENT DROP

Projectionists have noted that upon striking the suprex arc, the arc current or amperage will be lower by from 5 to 10 amperes than its normal operating current after the arc has stabilized itself. For instance, assuming the normal arc current to be, say, 50 amperes, it will be noticed that upon striking the arc, the arc current will be from 5 to 10 amperes lower and will take anywhere from half a minute to three minutes before the normal 50-ampere rate is maintained.

The cause of this characteristic has been laid to line fluctuations coming into the power supply device, to the power supply device itself, and to several other things, but the real cause, I believe, is as follows:

The positive suprex carbon is composed of a shell of carbon heavily copper-plated and having a core very large in proportion to the diameter of the carbon. This core is composed of several alkaline earth metals more conductive than the carbon shell and more easily fused than is the carbon shell.

The negative suprex carbon is composed mostly of carbon and having a very small core, and is also heavily copper-plated on the outside.

Upon striking the arc, the negative carbon is brought into contact with the positive carbon, and at the point of contact considerable heat is generated in the vicinity of the cores of the two carbons with a resultant sudden fusing of core material. Upon drawing the negative carbon away from the positive carbon to create the arc, a considerable amount of the core material has been burned away, leaving the carbon shell—which, as before stated, is not as conductive in that state as it is when the core material is present and unfused.

It then becomes necessary for the carbon shell to be burned away to a point where the core becomes active again, and this may take anywhere from a few seconds to two or three minutes, according to how the arc is struck and according to how much core material has been removed in the act of striking the arc. For instance, we will say that upon striking the arc the core is fused away to a depth of an eighth of an inch; it will then be necessary to burn away the eighth of an inch of shell before the core starts to play an important part in the arc. During the time that the eighth-inch of shell is being burned away, the conductivity of the arc is lower and therefore the arc current will be lower, but when this eighth-inch of shell is burned away, the arc functions normally and draws normal current.

STRIKING THE ARC

It is therefore of considerable importance, in order to obtain best operation, that attention be given to the striking of the arc. The carbons should be brought together with as little pressure as possible and immediately separated in order that as little core as possible be burned away.

It is possible to strike the arc in such a way that in a very few seconds the arc will be burning normal, and again it is possible so to strike the arc that it will take from two to three minutes before it will burn normally.

The striking of the arc properly is of importance because often the changeover is made very shortly after striking the arc, in which case the first minute or so of projection is not good, due to the fact that the arc has not stabilized itself and resultant light is poor as compared with what it is with the arc stabilized or burning normal.

The writer has witnessed cases where projectionists light up the second arc from four to five minutes before changeover in order to have good light at the time of changeover, and upon learning the cause of this, they have been able to strike the arc less than a minute before changeover with perfect results.

Occasionally a brown tip forms on the end of the negative carbon, which is of high enough resistance to prevent striking the arc unless considerable pressure is exerted between the two carbons, and when this is done, it usually removes considerable core material when the arc is struck. By moistening the tip of the negative carbon the arc can be struck easily, and this can be done by merely moistening the tip of the finger and then touching it to the tip of the negative carbon.

Another characteristic of the suprex arc is that of its differences in operation when supplied with current from a source of current supply containing a ballast and from one not using a ballast.

In operation, the crater that is formed on the positive carbon, varies in depth continuously—that is, its depth varies continuously because the core material is burned away faster at one instant than at another, and therefore the current across the arc varies in the same manner.

If the power source supplying current to the arc contains no ballast resistance, the ammeter in series with the arc will vary in its reading in accordance with the current changes in the arc caused by the change of crater depth, but these changes are not transmitted to the screen, the light from which will be fairly constant. However, if a source of supply is used in which there is ballast, the ammeter reading will be fairly constant, because the ballast resistors will not change the current output as fast as the arc demands. But although the ammeter hand appears perfectly steady, the light on the screen will vary as the crater depth varies.

The variations of the ammeter in series with the arc which occur when a source of current having practically no ballast is used, has been puzzling to some projectionists. They have been of the opinion that the cause of these fluctuations was due to fluctuations in the supply voltage being used to supply current to the motor-generator or rectifier used as the power supply device for the arc. Tests, however, will show that the cause of the fluctuations in ammeter readings is due to a change of current demand at the arc itself.

AMMETER DISTORTION

In nearly all of the suprex lamps manufactured today there is an electro-magnet or a permanent magnet used to influence the arc, and there is a strong magnetic field set up around this magnet. When an ammeter is placed in the lamp housing, in many cases it has been placed very close to the above mentioned magnet and its reading is influenced by the magnet fields set up by the magnet. The influence of this magnetic field on the meter makes it read lower than it should. In other words, the ammeter, being influenced by the field of this electro-magnet, may read 50 amperes, yet the actual current measured by an ammeter not influenced by the magnetic field will show that the actual current is sometimes as high as 58 to 60 amperes.

The meter itself is not at fault as it has been calibrated where it was not influenced by any magnetic field, but when placed on the lamp at close proximity to this strong magnetic field, its reading can no longer be relied upon. Therefore, to obtain a real check on the amount of current being used at the arc, a good ammeter should be inserted in the circuit completely away from the influence of the electro-magnet in the lamp.

The writer has been advised by a number of projectionists that the carbon consumption in their lamps did not correspond to the accepted rate of consumption as given by the National Carbon Company and others at various rates of current. In checking up on these cases it was found that the projectionist was relying entirely upon the ammeter reading as shown by the meter on the lamp, and it was found that these readings were anywhere from 3 to 10 amperes lower than the actual current, which, of course, accounted for the more rapid consumption of the carbon.

F. H. RICHARDSON'S COMMENT

AND ANSWERS TO INQUIRIES

TWO NEEDED AIDS IN THE ADVANCEMENT OF PROJECTION

IT HAS BECOME increasingly apparent that what is most needed to bring projection to its highest standard, and thus place the product of the motion picture industry before its buyers in its most attractive form, is to "sell" projection perfection more completely to exhibitors and theatre managers—particularly the latter. If we are to attain universal excellence in projection of the image and reproduction of sound, theatre managers must be brought not only to a far better understanding of what constitutes excellence in both these functions, but also to a much more complete knowledge of the box office value of perfection therein and the complexity of the problems involved.

We still have an astonishingly large percentage of theatre managers and exhibitors who have only the most nebulous ideas as to what constitutes excellence in screen image and sound. This fact is made evident to any one able to judge who visits a considerable number of theatres. Screen images that violate every rule of common sense! Sound that is at least faulty and in some cases really offensive.

Managers should know the essential elements of good screen image and of good sound. They must be brought to an understanding of the box office value of practical perfection in projection. They must be made to understand the possibility of loss through waste of electric power and in too rapid deterioration of equipment as a result of a lack of good judgment, expert knowledge and the proper skill in the projection room.

It is all very well and quite necessary to continue the teaching of projectionists. We all need instruction and always will. But it is today even more important to teach exhibitors and theatre managers. Too many of them are today moving heaven and earth to sell their shows against the handicap of more or less imperfect projection. I could never understand why some persons see fit to discourage instruction of theatre managers and exhibitors concerning projection and its problems. How can we expect exhibitors and managers to give serious attention to projection matters if they have no comprehensive understanding of them, of the problems involved and the financial importance of projection excellence?

Another matter of great importance representing a need of projection today, concerns apprentices. I am glad to see some of the progressive Canadian Provinces—Alberta, notably—are by law virtually compelling what amounts to at least a one-year straight apprenticeship, plus a qualified or partial apprenticeship extending over a further period of two additional years, and all of it under conditions that not only advise but compel study. Incidentally, as a matter of information, this law has been in effect for at least three years, and to date I have had no reports or complaints that it has caused the least inconvenience to Canadian unions.

The refusal of unions to establish a well planned, well guarded apprentice system, and to insist that only duly accredited apprentices, who have served their full apprenticeship turn, be employed in theatres, has the effect of filling the ranks with men who manage to "butt in," often with the most sketchy training in projection, and with insufficient knowledge of its technique. These men are, in the very nature of things, "cheap" men, but their work is cheap, too.

There should be an apprenticeship required, its length dependent upon the number of posts to be filled. That is how it is done in other fields. A locomotive fireman, for example, is promoted to engineer when there is need for one, the promotion going to the fireman longest in service, provided he can pass a prescribed examination. It is so in many if not most trade unions. It should be in unions of projectionists. I know of no objection to such a system that is based upon the greatest good for the profession and for the motion picture industry. I make the unqualified assertion that in time it would prove beneficial to the projection unions.

EFFECT OF PROJECTION ANGLE

J. L. JONES, of Hannibal, Mo., asks, "Will you be good enough to explain just why a heavy projection angle makes it difficult to provide sharp definition at both top and bottom of a screen set in vertical position, and why this effect seems to be worse with a large than with a small picture? Also, just what tests may and should the projectionist apply to new lenses to determine their quality. Thank you, which is not high pay but since I believe you have the thanks and esteem of all right-thinking projectionists and theatre managers, after all perhaps it has value."

All projection lenses give critical definition (focus) at only one exact distance from the optical center of the lens, though it is true a well corrected lens will provide acceptable (but not critical) definition over some relatively small range of distance.

If the screen be vertical and there be a projection angle, it of course follows that no two points in the height of the screen will be the same distance from the lens, hence at only one point in its height will it be possible to obtain critical definition. It of course follows that with a screen of fixed height, as the projection angle is increased, the difference in distance from lens at top and bottom of screen is increased; also, at any given projection angle, as the height of the picture is increased, the difference in distance from lens to top and bottom of screen is increased.

If, however, the projection angle be not too heavy and the lens be a good one (well corrected for flatness of field), then if definition at a point midway from top to bottom be focused critically, the lens may and probably will provide satisfactory definition at all points.

As to the second query, upon receipt of a new projection lens I would remove its front and back elements from the lens barrel and examine the workmanship of its mounts very carefully, to satisfy myself as to the quality of mechanical construction. Next I would secure a clear, thin, perfectly flat piece of sheet mica, upon which, after trimming it to film width and using the point of a knife, I would scratch a few perfectly straight lines up and down and crosswise. Having tested the aperture plate film tracks and tension shoes to make sure they are perfectly flat and level, I would then place this piece of mica over the aperture, close the gate, project the white light with or without projector in operation, and, with the assistance of a helper, stretch lines tightly over the screen image of these scratch marks. If they are perfectly straight, then the lens has no "barrel" or kindred distortions. If the lines are not perfectly straight, I would make note of which way one of the lines bends, reverse the bit of mica and try again, this to make certain the fault was not due to the mica not being perfectly flat over the aperture. If the result is the same, I would refuse the lens.

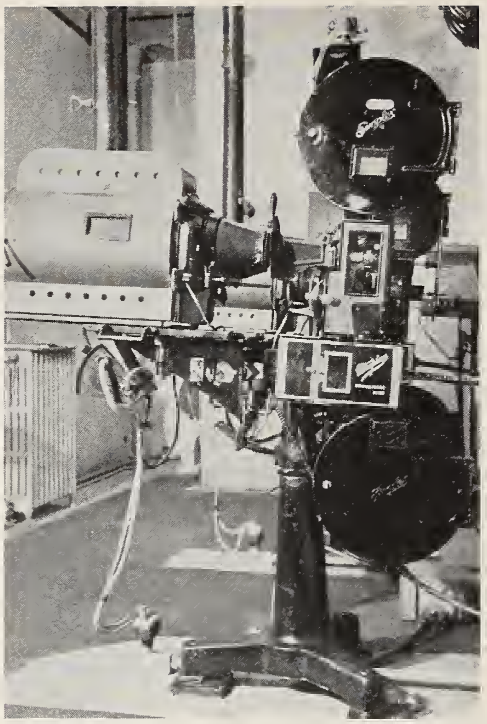
Following this, I would focus the center of a picture as sharply as possible, station myself in front of the screen and have an assistant hold a frame 2 feet square, on which is stretched a sheet of white paper (the back of a poster will do) at the screen surface at one of its lower corners and, being careful to hold it as nearly as possible at right angles with the light beam, slowly advance it toward the lens until the image upon it attains maximum sharpness, which experiment would advise me as to just how well the lens was corrected for flatness of field. If the lack in this respect be too great I would secure other lenses and subject them to the same test, until finally I found the one that gave best results in both tests.

RECTIFIERS AND LINE CURRENT FREQUENCY

C. C. WILLIAMS, sound technician of Rome, Ga., has kindly checked me up on a statement in the May 2nd issue of BETTER THEATRES. He writes, "You say a 30-cycle rectifier would pass only one cycle when used on 60-cycle current. That is not correct, due I believe to an error of statement on your part. It appears in 'Adjustments Following Change in Current,' page 35.

"A rectifier using either bulbs or disc, with transformer for voltage reduction, will pass both 'sides' of either 30- or 60-cycle a.c., provided the phase and voltage be the same, but the output of 60 volts will be less than that of 30-volt current, since the inductance is directly proportional to the frequency.

"I think you meant to say the 60-volt rectified current would be equal to the current strength output of a half-wave rectifier, though that is not exactly true. It would, in fact, pass a little more than that. Please don't infer that I have the idea you don't know what you are talking about. That is not the case. I realize it is nothing more than an error and that man who never makes one has yet to be born."



This is a picture of the projection room of the Spencer theatre in Spencer, Ia., taken and sent in by W. Lee Beckley, projectionist at the Spencer, in response to my recent suggestion that projectionists let us have a photographic look-see of their "offices." Like many who have similarly responded, Friend Beckley has taken what is really a close-up of a projector, whereas the view should be of the entire room, showing all its equipment and general layout. Beckley's room has Simplex projectors with Peerless lamps. The soundheads are Ultraphone. . . . Let's have more samples of projectionist kodakery—but have 'em show as much as possible of the room and equipment.—F. H. R.

My original statement was edited, probably to shorten it because of space limitations, and my meaning was not what finally appeared. To get the whole matter straight, I referred it to a rectifier manufacturer's engineer for complete analysis, which is as follows:

"A rectifier designed for operation of a projection arc, whether of the tube or copper oxide type, must be designed for the frequency of the supply line from which it is to be operated. A rectifier designed for operation on a 30-cycle supply line could be used on a 60-cycle supply line without difficulty, but a rectifier designed for 60 cycle operation could not be used on a 30-cycle supply.

"The difference, of course, between a 60-cycle and a 30-cycle supply line is that the 30-cycle rectifier would give a direct current output having half the number of impulses as the 60-cycle rectifier, and if the direct current from the 30-cycle rectifier was not filtered sufficiently, there would be a 30-cycle ripple, which, when combined with the 48-cycle shutter frequency, would leave a difference of 18 cycles, which would give a very noticeable flicker to the projected light and, in fact, the 30-cycle frequency of the light itself without shutter running would be noticeable.

"With the single phase type of rectifier being used, it would be practically impossible to sufficiently filter the arc supply current to a point where the projection would be satisfactory. However, a rectifier designed for operation from a 2- or 3-phase, 30-cycle supply line, could be sufficiently filtered to give perfect operation on either 25- or 30-cycle supply line.

"With a 60-cycle single-phase rectifier, it is a comparatively simple matter to filter the output so that the resultant light on the screen will be without flicker other than the normal flicker caused by the shutter. The direct current output from a 2-phase or 3-phase 60-cycle rectifier requires very little filter to remove the remaining ripple, which would have a frequency of 240 cycles in the case of 2-phase, and 360 cycles in the case of 3-phase rectification.

"In summary, a single-phase current of 30 cycles rectified, will give 3600 impulses per minute, whereas a 60-cycle would give double this, or 7200 impulses per minute.

"Two-phase or 3-phase current rectified, of course, will raise the frequency of the ripple materially above this—for instance, a 30-cycle 3-phase supply would give 180-cycle frequency, and a 60-cycle phase would give 360-cycle. The higher the frequency, the easier it is to filter, and likewise when the frequency of the ripple is above 48 to 50 cycles, it can no longer be seen, as the eye will not record changes of light intensity having a frequency of 50 cycles or more.

"A single-phase rectifier for supply lines having a frequency of less than 50 cycles is not practical and is not at all satisfactory for projection purposes. However, rectifiers designed for operation from a 3-phase line having a frequency as low as 25 cycles is perfectly satisfactory and will give perfect results."

This explanation is by J. K. Elderkin of the Forest Manufacturing Company.

EXPLAINING LIGHT REFRACTION "SIMPLY"

JOHN L. RANDALL of St. Louis, writes, "My puzzle just now is that I cannot quite understand why the direction of light is altered when it enters glass, or passes out of same. I have read many explanations, but none of them seem to really make the matter very clear. Will you see what you can do to straighten matters out?"

Light travels more slowly the denser the medium through which it is traveling. And it travels in waves. Take a room with a light source at one end. From that source the waves travel to all parts of the room. Each wave is the full width of the room. That is to say, it leaves the source in curved form, the curvature on any point of its progress being that of the circumference of a circle the radius of which is the distance of the wave from the light source. Now glass is denser than air and therefore light travels more slowly therein than it does in air. Then if we place a sheet of glass across that room at an angle to the ends thereof, one end of the wave will meet that glass before the other does (for the purpose of this explanation let us consider the light wave as a straight line) and will be retarded, the retrogression proceeding clear across the room as the wave advances. Thus the direction of the waves are altered.

I submitted this explanation to the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company, and have this reply from Doctor Rayton of that concern's scientific bureau:

"While there is nothing specifically wrong about the explanation you have made, still I doubt that it will convey a clear understanding of the refraction of light. As a matter of fact, it is difficult to explain the phenomenon if you start with the wave theory. By this I mean that it is complex and difficult to describe it in terms of any other well known phenomenon. It is of course not at all difficult from the mathematical standpoint.

"In order to explain the phenomenon to people who are not physicists or mathematicians, I think it is better to forget the wave theory of light and think of rays of light proceeding in straight lines and parallel to each other. This permits an analogy with a line of men marching side by side at an equal rate of speed. Suppose this line of men were proceeding over a smooth pavement and that eventually they came to the end of the pavement and entered upon a region of deep sand. If the line of march were perpendicular to the edge of the pavement, they would all strike the sand at the same time and their speed would be decreased, but they would continue to move forward in the same direction as before.

"Suppose, however, the line separating the pavement from the sand were inclined at an angle to the original line of march. The man at one end of the line would strike the sand before anyone else. As soon as he entered it his rate of progress would be slowed up, while the rest of the line were continuing to move at the original rate of speed. A moment later the next man would strike the sand and his rate of motion would be decreased.

"By following out this line of reasoning for each man, it can easily be demonstrated that the line joining the men after they have all entered the sand will not be parallel to the line joining the men while they were marching on the pavement, but will be inclined at an angle to it. You can go on and imagine that the sand is merely a band of uniform width separating two areas of smooth pavement and show that, as the men leave the sand and move again onto the pavement, the line joining the men swings around again until it is parallel to its original position.

"The band of sand of uniform width represents a plano-parallel plate of glass. An inclined beam of light striking such a plate of glass leaves the glass plate in the same direction it was traveling in when it struck the glass but its path during its transmission through the glass is different. It seems to me that this approach is much easier to understand than any attempt to explain the phenomenon on the basis of the wave theory."

There, Brother Randall, is an explanation as simple as can be made. I hope you get a clearer picture of the phenomenon from it than you have been able to form heretofore.

THE MANY CAUSES OF FRYING NOISES

FOSTER D. BRUNTON, vice-president and sound technician of the Gaiety theatre in Agana, Guam, writes, "Dear Mr. Richardson: Some while ago you asked your readers to send a list of causes which frying noises in sound systems could be attributed to. Being located in the tropics, where extreme heat and humidity offer adverse conditions for sound equipment, I have had considerable experience with such troubles and have had to make good for the reason that here we are unable to obtain the big city service now so well established and so invaluable in the States.

"I shall here name some of the causes that may be held responsible for frying and other noises:

"Wires connecting the elements of a vacuum tube to the prongs become unsoldered from the prongs. Most likely to happen when the tube has a loose base, as handling such tubes may cause the small amount of solder in the prong tip to be loosened. It is an excellent idea to remove tubes of this type by taking hold of the base, rather than the glass envelope.

"A frying noise results if the photocell lead connection is imperfect. The amplification at this point is so great that the slightest imperfection in a connection will cause a great deal of noise.

"A frying noise will result if a small amount of oil falls upon the photocell lead.

"Other possible causes are dirty socket contacts in amplifier, faulty electrolytic or paper filter condenser in power supply circuit of amplifier, slight leakage to ground from any wire in the system (possibly due to defective insulation on the wire), poor ground connection of either amplifier or projector, loose or corroded fuse in the power main switch or any other place where fuses are located, dirt or oil on the film sound track, practically any loose connection anywhere in the sound system, practically any defective condenser or resistor in the system, faulty insulation in the power transformer of the amplifier, worn out volume control or fader, shield cans not snugly fitted over tubes employing them, loose grid clip on tubes with grid caps, defective audio transformer (either input, interstage or output), faulty windings or corrosion of the windings in a filter choke.

"I had one case where a frying noise was traced to the arc control motor. It had a commutator, and slight sparking there was picked up and amplified until it could be heard all over the theatre. To test for this, open the switch that controls the motor and feed by hand, listening meanwhile. If the frying stops—well that's that, is it not? To remedy, connect two 200-volt 0.5 Mfd (or larger) condensers in series. Ground the wire connecting them solidly to the projector frame and connect the outside leads across the input circuit of the motor. By this plan the high-frequency currents radiated by brush sparking will be carried off to ground and not picked up by the amplifier.

"If there are any incandescent lamps near the input stage of the amplifier, the bulbs must be screwed very firmly into their sockets. Otherwise a very fine sparking may occur at base of lamp and there will or may be fry in the sound.

"If the stage speaker is supplied with a separate exciter, its connections, tubes and contacts should all be checked, as some speakers employ from 200 to 300 volts on their fields, which will cause sparking unless contacts are perfect, and such sparking means inevitable frying sounds.

"A loose contact in the ammeter circuit or at the socket of the exciter lamp, may cause sparking, with sounds suggesting chicken in a hot skillet. Any small switch may have corroded contacts, with consequent imperfect contact and frying noises. Switches, such as those used for changeover, are required to break fairly heavy current. This may result in roughened or burned contact surfaces, with the hot skillet effect. Where motor-generators supply projector light sources, sparking at their commutators means frying noises.

"Where thermionic tubes are used as rectifiers to supply arc current, care must be exercised that the tubes be screwed solidly into their sockets; also a good contact must be made where the flexible leads connect to the top of the rectifier bulb.

"Almost anything that sparks in any degree in the vicinity of either the amplifier or photocell will cause noise, usually of the frying variety. Good, clean, tight connections and soldered joints are highly valuable assets in any sound system. Even the use of a corrosive soldering paste may cause noise. Only rosin should be used in making soldered joints in sound systems.

"Now, Mr. Richardson, I don't pretend to know it all. I have merely herein listed some of the causes of fry that I have myself encountered and the remedies I have found to be effective as cures or preventatives. The list doubtless is far from complete, but if others who read your Comments will do as I have done, in the end we may have available a complete list to which we may turn as a memory aid when such troubles show up. May I close with best wishes and sincere admiration for the good work you are doing for us in your columns."

I thank you, Friend Brunton, and extend the hand of friendship and good fellowship across more than 6,000 miles of land and water, and I am sure that this rhetorical hand clasp includes that of many of our

TWO WAYS TO END TAIL FLAME FLARE

I HAVE had several letters commenting on the article, "Low Arc Voltage," in the April 4th issue. Barney De Vietti, of the Strand theatre in Helper, Utah, writes, "In the April 4th issue a problem relative to instability of the low-intensity trim was set forth by G. R. La Point, Westbotough, Mass. After commenting, you asked for reports from any of us who have met with this trouble. Well, I have, and my method of overcoming it is as follows:

"Upon assuming the duties of projectionist in the Strand theatre about two years ago, I was annoyed by the frequent sudden flaring of the arc flame, due, as I finally discovered, to the tail flame climbing to the top of the crater and burning off the residue of loose carbon that builds up on the top of the positive. Believe me, F. H., when one is doing his best to present a screen image that he can be justly proud of, and such a fault bobs up every once in a while—well, as for myself, I did a bit of plain and fancy cussing, because it certainly looked like (deleted) on the screen.

"After trying several methods to correct the fault, I discovered one which has proven very successful. So much so in fact that I have had no recurrence of the trouble during the past two years. After striking the arc of the incoming projector and separating the carbons to their normal positions, by means of the negative carbon control I raise the negative above the level of the positive carbon and move it across the top thereof about half an inch. This burns off the entire deposit as slick as a whistle. Enough does not accumulate before the reel is finished to again set up the trouble. Doubtless this seems a rather screwy idea, but it certainly does the trick."

John R. Snow of Harvard, Ill., discusses the same problem thus: "I also was troubled with loose carbon deposit and flaring of the tail flame. Also I know of two other theatres in the same town who had the same trouble. The reason the loose carbon deposits affect the second reel and not the one being projected while deposit forms is because of the moisture in the carbon, and sudden changes of temperature from 4,000° to approximately 1,000° and lower, cause the deposit to become highly tempered. When the second reel is started and is being projected, these highly tempered deposits, together with the moisture in a positive carbon, attract the arc stream and the small particles of carbon fall through it, thus causing it to climb toward the highest point of the crater. One simple thing remedied the whole trouble for me. I kept the carbons absolutely dry, storing a lot of them in the top of the lamp house.

"Another trouble with damp carbons is that it forces a projectionist to draw a long arc gap in order to prevent sputtering or freezing. When carbons are perfectly dry, a proper arc gap is permitted and a much whiter light results. Many projectionists keep four or five sets of carbons on the lamp house floor, but this does not adequately dry them. The only time I ever use the wipe method is when a shipment of carbons is late, so I can not get them properly dried before the dried stock gives out. Please understand, though, the carbon deposits will still form on top of the crater, but will cause no trouble if the carbons carry absolutely no moisture."

I am printing these two letters without undertaking to discuss the merits of the suggestions. As a matter of fact, I am not sure I quite understand what Friend Snow means by "tempered." Most emphatically, though, as I have told you many times, carbons should be thoroughly dried out. Any degree of dampness whatsoever in carbon is bad. I have long been a believer in the storage of a considerable number of carbons in the top of the lamp house, where, being subjected to high temperature for several days, all moisture will be expelled.

FREEING LAMP MOTOR OF CARBON DUST

WILBUR FLAHERTY, projectionist of Fort Dodge, Iowa, who has at least one invention on the market, writes, "Here is a tip that may be of value to those using the Strong Junior reflecting arc lamps that have the motor windings in the arc circuit. I have found that if once or twice during the day the carbons are backed well apart and the arc control motor let run for a while with the arc not burning, the motor will usually work better for the rest of the day. This holds for new as well as old equipments. It seems to enable the motor to free itself and its commutator of carbon dust."

Well, I don't quite know about that, but quite possibly what Brother Flaherty says is correct. Suppose you try it.

ON THE SAYING OF UNPLEASANT TRUTHS

FROM John L. Russell, St. Louis, Mo., comes this interesting letter which it may be well to read and ponder. Friend Russell says, "I was present at one of your talks recently, which I both enjoyed and received profit from. It is a pity we have not more men who are not afraid to tell us unpleasant truths in such manner that one cannot feel angry without at the same time feeling absurd. For those unpleasant truths we all know are truths, and their telling, as you set them forth, tends to rub our nose in the mess, which don't always smell too good.

"We have entirely too many back-patting men and publications that, presumably for business reasons, seldom say anything but pleasant things. They side-step saying or printing that which they well know (if they know anything about projection work as is) they should say or print, lest they give offense and thus lose friends or business. Such men or publications serve relatively little good purpose. I especially liked your statement, made in the talk I listened to, that you do not consider yourself as the servant of the projectionist, the exhibitor or the theatre manager, but wholly as the servant of the Motion Picture Industry itself. That was a really big statement, Richardson, for the reason that it includes everything.

"As I see it, it means that you have no special interest that must be served when such service reacts against the industry viewed as a whole. [That is precisely the meaning, Friend Russell.—F.H.R.] and that one who serves but one interest, right or wrong, ultimately loses out, but the man who is militant against wrong, regardless of where that wrong be found, in the end wins for the reason that while what he may say or write may and often does sting, or even hurt, we all know it is right, and after the inevitable ouch, we like and admire him.

"I also admire your work, Mr. Richardson, for the reason that, of them all, you best understand and know what it is all about, due I believe to the fact that, while it was long ago, you did work as a motion picture projectionist for several years. It is quite true that since that time projection has changed very greatly, still you learned its fundamentals, and apparently much more thoroughly than did anyone else. And by your projection room experience you became 'one of the boys.' You speak our language, therefore are able to talk to us convincingly. You understand us and we understand you, which is after all a very big point—perhaps the biggest one of them all. For when you tell us unpleasant truths, we know you know what you are talking about, therefore we are willing to listen without becoming really offended. More power to you, Dad! May your shadow spread over the projection field for many years."

I thank you, sir. Of course, commercial interests must and should be served. The motion picture industry is made up of these. But when individual commercial interests are not related to the stability and progress of the industry as a whole, everybody loses sooner or later.

RELATION OF FILM TO RCA STABILIZER

HAROLD WOTT, projectionist of Oak Harbor, Ohio, asks, "Would you inform me as to whether or not in the new model RCA Photophone rotary stabilizer soundhead, the film between the lower steady-speed sprocket and the stabilizer should be taut or slack during normal operation; also, what should be the position of the pressure roller with relation to the films and stabilizer drum during normal operation?"

To make certain of absolute correctness, I referred this query to RCA Photophone, and here is their reply:

"In answer to the first question, the film from the lower sprocket to the impedance roller of the drum has a loop, so that it is slack during operation. As to the second question, regarding the posi-

RECTIFIER AND SCREEN AT FAULT

A CHIEF projectionist in an Illinois city has written about trouble which he describes as follows:

"This theatre has just been remodeled in the best possible manner. We really have good shows, but the design of the theatre is such that, of necessity, the projection angle is pretty terrible. We have new Simplex projectors having 5-point bases, and you may know the angle when I say that the back of said bases had to be raised one inch off the floor to get the screen image properly located on the screen. Of the old equipment we retained two Strong low-intensity lamps, a cheap lens and a pair of Tungar tube rectifiers. A new screen was purchased which, while it has high reflective power, is totally unfit for a house where the projection angle is so high.

"Our real trouble, however, is a bad case of flicker that has been present since opening. This must be corrected and we are willing to buy new equipment, if necessary, to do it, but want your opinion as to what is necessary to put the best possible result on our screen.

"As to the flicker, I believed it was caused by the shutter, but after experimenting with several models cut out of paper, I found a 50-50 gave best results, though it does not entirely eliminate the trouble. Projection distance is 75 feet; screen image 17 feet wide. Light source, Strong low-intensity, using 28-32 S.R.A. carbons. Projection lens, 3.5 inch E.F., of cheap make.

"Is it not possible that the rectifier is not properly rectifying the current? When the white light (no film) is projected, the flicker disappears. When a light scene is projected, a bad case of flicker is present."

There is more, but the salient facts have been set forth. Because of what you have already tried out, there seems but one possibility, that rectifier is not functioning properly. It is passing one "side" of the a.c. full, and the other only partially. I do not say this is certainly true, but that is what it surely looks like. Try installing new, tested tubes first. If that does not clear it up, better have the rectifier tested out.

As to the lenses, certainly with such a short focal length you should have the very best, most highly corrected lenses. Cheap ones of that focal length certainly are not the thing, especially when hampered by such a projection angle.

In your unpublished remarks you say you are not getting the light you should, which again points to the possibility of insufficient current as a result of the rectifier trouble I have suggested, though it also is possible your "not enough light" is due to comparison of your screen image with others projected with more brilliant light sources. You see, the low-intensity arc cannot compete with the later, more brilliant suprex type light sources.

As to your screen, it should have a widely diffusing surface, since a specular surface, such as your present screen presumably has, will reflect very much of the light downward, instead of back toward the audience.

You request that I do not publish your letter, but I believe your objections will be overcome by omitting name and location, and this happens to be a case that will interest many theatre men, so I am using it with name and location omitted.

BAFFLING AND HOUSING SPEAKERS

FROM ARKANSAS comes a letter, parts of which read, "We get valuable ideas from your Comments in BETTER THEATRES. There are many of us small towners and our possibilities for acquiring reliable information is largely limited to what we can glean from MOTION PICTURE HERALD and BETTER THEATRES. On the whole we (or very many of us) understand projection problems just about as well as the average farmer understands aviation. Our first impulse, therefore, when something we cannot dope out confronts us, is to 'ask Richardson.' In many cases, however, we hesitate because no one likes to ask things when not certain they are not fool questions.

"All of which leads up to two queries, as follows: First, are the directional baffles now on sale and being exploited by dealers, of any real value in improving the clarity and quality of sound? We have two Magnivox speakers, inclosed in home-made housings. One speaker is on each side of the screen, their centers about 32 inches from the floor. These housings are about 15 inches square by 24 inches long. At the front end of each is a flat, home-made baffle about 36 inches square, its front even with the screen surface. The auditorium floor is 3 feet lower than the stage floor. The baffles are of ordinary building Celotex, attached to the housing with wood screws.

"The second question is, should the rear end of the housing be closed in or left open? If closed, how and with what? Ours are open, and back stage the sound seems better and plainer (voices and music) than out front. The screen is 6 feet from the rear wall. Side and rear walls are covered with Celotex. An exhibitor in a near-by town packed the rear end of his housing with lint cotton. Please, Mr. Richardson, if you may wish to use this to benefit others, do not expose our ignorance by printing our name or address."

First of all, these are not fool questions. I was not too sure of the answers so I called on Aaron Nadell, who collaborated with me in the chapters on sound of my last Bluebook. He has prepared this reply:

"The home-made speaker housings apparently serve no purpose except possibly to introduce some sound distortion. Were the rear of the housings closed in, reflection from the stage walls would be prevented, but there would be some increase in distortion, even with cotton wool. The designing of a sound absorbent speaker housing is a relatively complicated matter. The only kind of speaker housing or speaker baffle that should ever be constructed is a plain, flat one.

"The letter says all walls are covered with Celotex, under which condition there probably is no need for trumpets or directional baffles. Those are helpful only under acoustic conditions that make it desirable to confine sound distribution to certain areas—to project sound into areas where volume is below normal, or to direct sound away from reflecting areas. The auditorium in this case being acoustically treated (I assume the ceiling and rear wall to be covered with Celotex), flat baffles should be all that is necessary.

"Were it my theatre, here is what I would do: (1) Install a sound screen and install the speakers at its rear. (2) Increase the dimensions of the flat baffles from 33 inches to at least 4 feet square, which could be done were the speakers behind the screen. Such baffles would give improved low-frequency response. (3) When these steps had been taken, if any annoying echo or resonance originating in back of the screen is heard in the auditorium (relatively improbable with Celotex-covered walls), I would place velour drapes in back of the speakers, heavily gathered but loosely hung, so as to provide sound absorption without creating definite cavity.

"One more point: The diagram shows side walls and stage walls to be covered with Celotex. If the ceiling and front wall be similarly treated, the chances are good that the auditorium is too dead, in which case, to secure best results, some of the Celotex must be removed to provide sufficient reflection for reasonable naturalness in the sound. However, I could advise better on this if I had complete architects' drawings of the entire auditorium and stage, complete data concerning thickness of Celotex used, and complete data as to plan of seating, carpets used, if Ozite under them, type of seats, plus details of exposed areas (if any) of auditorium not covered with Celotex and not otherwise accounted for. All this is necessary to enable calculation of proper reverberation time and the reverberation time now obtained."

There, my friend, you see what sort of "fool question" you have asked! Not half so easy as it seemed. I believe the reason he has recommended placing the speakers back of the screen is that it has been definitely established that large baffles, such as he suggested, do exactly as he says.

use of its projectionist examiner, has replied as follows to a letter in which I inquired as to his views regarding the value of the Bluebook:

"My Dear Mr. Richardson: We have received the Bluebook ordered March second. This book will be the means of presenting a more intelligent examination by the Examining Board of this city regarding projectionists.

"In our opinion, the projectionist plays an important part in conservation of the safety of theatre patrons, and certainly of property in any city. We therefore feel that it is important that the projectionist be qualified not only to provide a perfect presentation of motion pictures upon the screen, and sound through the loudspeakers, but also to conserve the welfare of audiences, which includes elimination of eye strain.

"We have thoroughly analyzed the questions and answers contained in Richardson's Bluebook of Projection and find that by its use a fair and intelligent examination can be given to applicants for projectionists' license. I sincerely appreciate your splendid spirit of co-operation and feel that the information you have supplied will be of great benefit to our city."

I believe comment is quite unnecessary concerning this letter, except to thank the Commissioner for his kindly reaction to the Bluebook and the work we have tried very hard and with much sincerity to do.

I might say, however, that the Commissioner of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity of New York City, also has a copy of the Bluebook, which I understand is to be used by the Projectionist Examining Board, if it is not already being put to that purpose.

One of the great weaknesses has been the inability of many examiners to make competent examination on anything except fire hazard and, to some extent, electricity. The new Bluebook changes all that. Not only may examiners now make a fairly competent examination on all projection matters, regardless of their individual lack of knowledge, but also theatre managers are enabled to determine, at least to a very considerable degree, just what applicants for the position of projectionist know and do not know.

APPRECIATION THAT IS WELL DESERVED

I WAS VERY much pleased recently to learn of a letter of appreciation written by Dr. Alfred N. Goldsmith, past-president of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, to Terry Ramsaye, editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, on behalf of the Projection Practice Committee, which had asked Dr. Goldsmith to express its appreciation of Mr. Ramsaye's to-be-remembered editorial on the significance of projection in the motion picture scheme. I know that projectionists in general took pride in that editorial, and I dare say that they will concur in Dr. Goldsmith's comment upon it. His letter reads:

"My dear Mr. Ramsaye: I have been asked by the Projection Practice Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, through its Chairman, Mr. Harry Rubin to convey to you their appreciation and approval of your recent editorial comments on the importance of the highest quality of picture projection in the theatre.

"Your analytical comments appeared to the Committee to be not only technically sound but commercially wise. The motion picture industry has been distinguished by close attention to story selection, suitable casting, careful camera work, adequate sound recording, and effective distribution of the resulting features, as well as striking exploitation methods involved in the exhibition of the pictures. Although, as you have so clearly pointed out, the resulting product is a molded light beam pouring through a tiny aperture in the projector and reaching the audience after its reflection from the screen, yet this final delivery of the motion picture product to the customer has hitherto engaged little more than occasional and grudging attention, with but few honorable exceptions.

"It is for these reasons as well as the specially forceful character of your remarks that the Committee has asked me to thank you and to express its hope and belief that the course of good projection will continue to command your good support."

FROM THE TRAVELS OF A PROJECTIONIST

FROM John H. Cuddy, projectionist of Palmer, Mass., comes this very interesting communication:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: Possibly the history of my projection experience may interest readers of your department. At the age of fourteen I managed to secure a job as usher and janitor in a motion picture theatre, of which same I later became manager. Having access to the projection room, I studied and got all the practical experience in projection I was able to while the shows were on.

"I do not belong to the I. A. for the simple reason that when I sent in my application I was advised that there were no openings, hence no more members were being admitted. However, I have never worked for less than union pay and on one occasion, up in Maine, when the theatre refused to pay the scale, I gave up the job. So much for that!

"Since 1916, save for a period of four years I have worked constantly as either theatre manager or projectionist. I have carried a Massachusetts license for nine years. Served in our army four years, three in Hawaii and one in Tientsin, China, in which latter I witnessed some of most interesting projection. In some of the smaller theatres, once a reel is started, no attempt is made to control sound volume. The gain control is left in one position whether the result be a roar of sound or there be not enough to be plainly audible. In some of the larger theatres, however, propection is good, but never what it could and should be.

"One strange custom prevails in Chinese theatres. Right in the middle of a show there is an intermission known as an 'interval' to permit patrons to patronize the bar and refreshment booth (operated by the theatre), where beer and liquors are obtainable. Another odd thing is a small screen alongside the regular one, for the purpose of stereo-projection of title slides in Russian, explaining the action, as in the old silent days. This is for the benefit of the many refugees from Northern Russia, known as "White Russians," who are bitter opponents of the present "Red" regime. Among them are some who were pretty high ranking officers in the Czar's army.

"American photoplays are the favorite over there, though practically all the British-made photoplays are also presented. Programs are printed in both English and Russian, at least in some of the theatres.

"In Hawaii, where I was chief clerk in the office of the assistant Chief of Staff, U. S. Army, I often went to the downtown theatres in Honolulu, most of which are equipped with modern projection equipment and offer as good entertainment as can be found anywhere.

"In my work I have all sorts of tools and my own projection room reels with large hubs. My motor-driven rewinder is geared down to safe, sane speed. We have extra projector mechanisms. You may recall that some while ago I wrote asking where I might obtain a film notching plyer. It seemed they were no longer available, but you had one which you let me have. It is one of my favorite tools, both because of its utility and for the reason that it once was owned by Mr. Richardson. I say this because you have made yourself my friend through the wonderful help of your articles and books for years. I sincerely trust you may live to represent projection and projectionists for years to come."

I am printing this letter for a definite reason. Here is a man who started as an usher, but did not confine himself merely to ushering. Instead he got busy, observed, studied the business, became manager, studied projection (as any usher might do if he had ambition and cared to) and became a projectionist in the true meaning of that term. He not only knows how, but puts his knowledge to practical use. He is not either mentally or physically lazy, and that is the real secret of success in any line of work.

As to the film notcher, it was an excellent tool. I was never able to understand why its sale was not pushed. It was a plyer that would snip out a neatly curved bit of film outside a cracked sprocket hole, thus very largely reducing the chance of catching on a sprocket idler or cutting the fingers at inspection time.

OBJECTIONS RAISED TO THE 2,000-FOOT REEL

WILLIAM C. BROWN of Sturgis, S. Dak., writes, "At last I have mustered up sufficient courage to write and give my viewpoint on several matters. It took a long while to get the nerve to do this, but here I am—a small town projectionist who wishes to unburden his mind.

"My first explosion is directed against machine operators who make splices like those enclosed. They are outrageous. They are the worst, but many other kinds almost as bad reach me from time to time. Besides poor form (sprocket holes not properly matched), they are otherwise poorly made. [I'll say! Film ends butted together and a piece of opaque film a half inch cemented on the celluloid side, but the celluloid not scraped and the cement not too good, hence the whole thing may be pulled apart with little effort.—F. H. R.] It seems as easy to make a good splice as to butcher things up this way.

"Secondly, may I express my disagreement on this 2,000-foot reel matter. I swear by your Bluebook, Mr. Richardson, and agree with you in almost everything, but in this one thing I don't. [More power to you. I like real men who are ready to stand up for their views regardless, at least until they are shown that those views are not well founded.—F. H. R.] I hold the 2,000-foot reel to be wasteful, in that it does not permit of using carbons as efficiently as does the 1,000-foot reel. It therefore increases carbon cost, which is an item that counts up in time. I know this is true, for I have been able to run two 1,000-foot reels on stubs I did not dare risk with a 2,000-footer. Moreover, it seems to me the fire risk is increased, and in my opinion the 2,000-footers will be harder on the projectors than will the shorter ones. Seems to me the 2,000-footer is a lazy man's way. Moreover, the damage to film will be increased because of the greater tension required."

While it is quite true that carbon splicers do not always produce wholly satisfactory results, and that unless one be used there is some added waste in carbon when using 2,000-foot reels, we are not so much interested in theory as in practice, and today, Brother Brown, I believe that at the very least three quarters of our theatres are doubling up the 1,000-foot reels.

True, also, there must be a bit higher tension in both the upper magazine and on the take-up, but if the sprockets are not permitted to wear too badly (a little added cost there, but not much), I don't believe the useful life of films will be much affected, if at all. You must remember that nowadays the useful life of a film production is short.

But still another item enters. It is my contention that a projector must not be permitted to operate without the projectionists beside it any more than is absolutely necessary. While threading up the idle projector and trimming its lamp, the projectionist cannot possibly be at his post of duty beside the working projector, and with 1,000-foot reels he must be absent at least twice as often as with 2,000-footers. Sorry, Brother Brown, but I'm afraid that on this matter you will have to see it my way or we'll be in disagreement on that point.

Should Each Theatre Business Be Incorporated?

is considerably less than required to organize a corporation. However, the additional expense and trouble usually is justifiable because a corporation has distinct advantages over a partnership.

ADVANTAGES OF CORPORATION

ONE ADVANTAGE of incorporating a theatre business is that a corporation never is liable for (a) any act of an employe not within the scope of the employment, or (b) for contracts not within the scope of the business as defined by the corporation's charter and not authorized by the directors. Moreover, any person who transacts business with a corporation is bound to know that the official or employe who assumes to represent the company, is legally authorized to bind the corporation.

CHARTER LIMITS

It is, also, important to know that while an individual is liable for contracts made by an employe who acts within the scope of the employment, and a partnership is liable for all acts of all partners, within the scope of the business, a corporation is not liable for contracts made by an employe who, though acting within the scope of his employment and within the scope of the business, but outside the scope of the corporation's charter. In fact, corporations are not liable for obligations created by contracts signed by duly elected officers, unless the subject matter of the obligations may fairly be construed as being within the scope of the corporation's charter.

UNAUTHORIZED ACTS

Moreover, a corporation is not liable for unauthorized contracts made by its officers, particularly where the company is not benefitted (114 So. 444).

On the other hand, a corporation is liable for unauthorized acts of any agent, employe or officer, if the directors of the corporation ratify the agreement, or permit the corporation to benefit by it.

For example, in a leading case it was disclosed that the directors of a corporation adopted a resolution to perform certain business acts of unusual importance without obtaining the stockholders' approval and without entering it on the books. A mortgage was given on the company's property as a means of securing the assumed obligation.

Subsequently, the corporation contested the validity of the mortgage on the grounds that the transaction was not legal because it had not been properly authorized. However, the court held the holder of the mortgage entitled to payment, stating the law as follows:

"A corporation which has received the consideration of a contract is not allowed to defend against an action of the contract on the grounds that the provisions of its charter .... were not complied with by the officer acting for the corporation in the execution of the contract."

CREDIT STANDING

Another important advantage of incorporating a theatre business is that the corporation's credit is firmly and quickly established, because it is comparatively simple for credit associations to obtain dependable reports of the financial status of a corporation, since its books are open for inspection and a detailed report of the profits and losses of the business is rendered at frequent intervals.

Moreover, the stockholders ordinarily may lose nothing in excess of their actual investment in the stock if the company becomes insolvent, whereas individuals and partners are responsible for all debts. A corporation is a legal entity, distinct from its stockholders (215 N. W. 855).

While under ordinary circumstances a stockholder in a corporation is not liable for losses greater than the value of the owned stock, yet stockholders may make a valid contract to bind themselves personally for the debts of the corporation, in excess of the stock valuation.

For illustration, in the leading case of Thomas v. Pearson (260 Pac. 623), it was disclosed that a stockholder signed a guarantee to pay the indebtedness of the company. The court held the signer liable on the contract, notwithstanding the debt of the corporation greatly exceeded the par value of the stock which the signer owned. This court said:

"In the present action the defendant (stockholder) agreed to pay the money in order to enable the corporation in which he was financially interested to pay the debts guaranteed by him and to continue in business. He was agreeing to invest his money in a business enterprise."

PERSONAL DISADVANTAGES

Although a corporation has many and distinct advantages over either an individual or partnership business, yet there are many disadvantages and risks incurred when changing from individual or partner ownership to a corporation.

An individual owner who incorporates his theatre business, positively releases personal control of it. Although the corporation is intended to be dissolved, it remains in existence unless the proper legal procedure is followed.

For example, in a leading case (160 N. E. 434) it was disclosed that a corporation discontinued its business through vote of its directors. About six months later, the treasurer, director and general manager, who owned all but two shares of stock in the company, reopened the business at another address without authority of the directors. The court promptly held that operation of the new business was illegal.

Also, an individual who incorporates his theatre business, automatically relinquishes his right of management without proper authorization from the directors. However, a theatre owner who retains a controlling interest and voting power of stock in his incorporated business, may manipulate the affairs of the corporation in substantially the same manner as where he is an individual owner, particularly if he retains the good will of the directors.

Another disadvantage of an incorporated theatre business is that certain formalities, such as meetings of directors, election of officers, distribution of profits and dividends, keeping accurate book accounts, and the like, must be followed in strict accordance with the law. Furthermore, authorization of unusual expenditures must be made by the proper officers very often at considerable inconvenience.

INDIVIDUAL OWNERSHIP

In order that readers may readily compare the risks and advantages associated with operation of a theatre by an individual, partnership, and corporation, the individual ownership will be briefly discussed.

As previously mentioned with respect to a partnership business, individual ownership of a theatre has the disadvantages that in case of financial disaster, the sole owner must bear the total loss. In an ordinary partnership business the partners bear the loss equally, to the extent of their financial worth, and in a corporation the owners of stock suffer financial loss equal to their respective investments in stock.

Since an individual theatre owner must rely upon employes to represent him in many business transactions, it is advisable to review the law of employes.

The law recognizes two classes of employes; namely, general and special. A manager, for example, is a general agent, because he is employed to perform all duties necessary to the successful conduction of the theatre business. A special agent is a common employe whose authority is limited to the performance of a kind of service for his employer.

An employer is liable only for such acts of a special agent that are performed within the scope of the authority given him by his employer. On the other hand, a manager may bind an individual theatre owner by all his acts, contracts, etc., which are within the scope of the theatre business.

However, the legal authority of the manager may be limited if the theatre owner notifies the parties and firms dealing with the manager of any special limitations of his authority.

An individual may incorporate a theatre business and retain all but a few shares of the stock. By this plan he retains all of the advantages and disadvantages of a corporation, yet he eliminates many of the disadvantages of operating as an individual.

A One-Floor Plan for 1400 Seats

stage end. The seating is arranged in five banks, two of them at the sides. The middle banks contain 35 rows of ten chairs each. Chairs (by American Seating Company) are spring-edge, spring back type covered in red mohair. The distance between the first row and the screen is 16 feet, with a screen width of 24 feet. The proscenium arch is 40 feet wide by 21 feet.

The stage is a screen and reproducer platform only, equipped with a traveller controlled from the projection room (curtain control system by Vallen).

The auditorium is decorated in a pattern radiating from the screen area as a focal point. Both walls and ceiling are of plaster, acoustic plaster being used throughout the ceiling and at the walls from a point about half-way back from the stage. The wall pattern consists in horizontal bands effected by alternate painted stripes and mouldings at the proscenium end, and merely mouldings along the remainder. The color scheme is peach, rust and blue with silver high-lighting.

The outer edge of the ceiling is slightly stepped toward a central reflecting area, from the midde of which is suspended two plaster panels extending approximately the length of the room. The upper panel is formed by a light trough, along the edges of which are 25-watt lamps spaced 8 inches on centers. This trough terminates at the screen end in a circular indirect lighting element.

AIR-CONDITIONING

The lower ceiling panel is an air diffuser above which conditioned air is introduced in a downward or pan-type system of air circulation, with exhaust by means of mushrooms beneath the seats. The air-conditioning system includes cooling by a Wittenmeir refrigerating machine employing carbon dioxide. Heating is through a return pipe vacuum system supplied by a boiler fired by a Ray oil burner. The entire conditioning and circulation system is automatically controlled by means of Minneapolis-Honeywell instruments.

PROJECTION

The projection gallery extends out into the rear of the auditorium and extending across it. The projection room proper measures 24 x 17 feet. Above a dark brown dado the walls are painted ivory. Adjoining it is a motor-generator room and a lavatory and toilet room. There are two Simplex projectors with Peerless Magnarc high-intensity (suprex) lamps, which are supplied by Hertner 10-kilowatt motor-generators. The sound system is Western Electric.

Modern Styling in a Compact Stadium Plan

Every second trough is without top or bottom, and the light shines through from the trough below. The troughs are lighted from top to bottom with yellow, orange, amber and blue lamps.

The pleated frieze is carried down the face of the projection room and along the soffit to the rear wall. Enclosed in the space are flutes 4 feet wide and 3 feet deep, each illuminated by metal troughs.

Flanking the stage are shallow recesses with four white wood columns in pairs flanking white enamelled statues in the modern spirit.

The ceiling is in red, blue and orange buff. An effect of a "floating ceiling" has been sought by breaking the ceiling with three drops and carrying four lines of concealed red and orange neon from proscenium to rear.

The stage is shallow (see plan), but dressing rooms have been provided at each side. The proscenium opening is 42 feet wide and 22 feet high. The maximum width of the screen image is 20 feet.

The stage has a proscenium curtain of cardinal red French velvet with silk cords and tassels.

modern interiors for theatres

. . . a group of special feature articles on treating the interior of the theatre in the modern manner, taking full advantage of the economies that modern materials and methods permit, will begin soon in Better Theatres. Every phase of interior decoration will be discussed, while several articles will give special attention to the new use of fabrics. The acoustical factors in auditorium treatments will be authoritatively considered. All of the articles will be profusely illustrated.
